Federal Water Tap:

Senate Committee Approves Yakima Basin Plan Bill
The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee approved a bill to improve water reliability and repair fish habitat in the Yakima River Basin, in Washington state. The act authorizes construction of fish passage at two dams and a pipeline between two reservoirs, expands storage capacity at Cle Elum reservoir, and encourages water trading.

Another key agreement for a troubled watershed in the American West, the Klamath River Basin Agreement, still awaits committee action.

Gila Diversion
Interior Secretary Sally Jewell has a decision: allow an environmental review of the controversial Gila River diversion to begin or reject the project. The deadline is today. The diversion, a network of canals, reservoirs, and pipelines in southwest New Mexico, could cost as much as $US 1 billion and disrupt the watershed's ecology. Interior Department statements to Circle of Blue indicate the secretary is likely to move ahead with the review.

Indigenous Peoples have always held the critical intersection of the struggles for social and ecological justice, and we're honored to reinforce their power with action skills. ruckas@ruckus.org

Indigenous Peoples Power Project (IP3)

2016 marked ten years since our first IP3 Training for Trainers. Over the past ten years, we've seen over 250 Indigenous leaders take and lead powerful direct actions both locally and internationally. This year, we called in the next generation of action trainers and practitioners to a Training for Indigenous Direct Action Trainers. 30 Indigenous direct action organizers from fights across North America gathered for four days of strategy, direct action theory, and non-violent direct action training skills.

IP3 and Ruckus recognize the critical role of Indigenous Peoples in movements of resistance and the struggles for self determination, sovereignty, human rights, climate justice and so much more. We believe in expanding power from within communities to fight for the solutions to ecological destruction and for self-determination.
