From Dennis M:

On This Day (2/12/1599): In 1599 the Acoma Massacre took place, in which 500 Acoma people were killed for defending their home from the Spanish in present-day New Mexico. Another 500 were taken prisoner and later sentenced to a variety of punishments. All were found guilty and Juan de Onate ordered their punishment. All men over 25 years old had one foot cut off and were forced to serve as slaves ...

On This Day (2/15/1866): In 1866 Major Samuel P. Smith and a combined force of 53 soldiers and 30 civilians attacked a camp of Paiutes in Guano Valley, near the Oregon-Nevada border. Over 80 Paiute warriors were killed, along with 15 women and children. The battle was part of the so-called Snake War (1864-1868) during which the military fought groups of Northern Paiute, Bannock and Shoshone in an attempt to confine their movements to the newly designated reservation lands. Over the course of the "war" over 1,700 Northern Paiute, Bannock and Shoshone were killed.

On Feb 15 in 1971 Pyramid Lake tribal council chair Teddy James told state legislative committees that the California/Nevada Interstate Compact—a water agreement between the two states—”hastens the death of our Indian society and hastens the death of the lake” and Nevada Intertribal Council director Robert Hunter said “the compact may be good for California and good for Nevada but it is in no way good for the Indians”—but Reno attorney Paul Richards, representing hunting and fishing groups, said “Our concern is a guarantee of water to Nevada...Let us fight among ourselves after we get it.”; in 2002 George W. Bush approved Nevada’s selection for a dump at Yucca Mountain for high level nuclear wastes.

National Trust Applauds "Major Victory": New Mexico Supreme Court Rules to Reinstate Mt. Taylor's Cultural Property Status

The New Mexico Supreme Court, in a unanimous decision, found that Mt. Taylor was properly designated a cultural property by the New Mexico Cultural Properties Review Committee. Listing as a cultural property requires New Mexico agencies to consult with the State Historic Preservation Officer before allowing activity that may negatively impact the site. Mt. Taylor's designation had been challenged by mining interests and others and was under review by the state Supreme Court. The National Trust participated in the litigation and presented oral argument as friend of the court in support of the tribes and the Cultural Properties Review Committee.

John D. Berry Native American/First Nations Literature

So, what shall I tell you?

Stories, wonderful stories,

Of journeys and night skies not my own.

About islands where a story teller rests,

Sunsets flashing green, and flaming red and orange.

Deserts where winds still at my command,

And prophets walked across the sands.

Where Crusaders fought Saracens,

And shadows and spirits wing West,
Towards the night lands,
Across Homer's wine dark sea.
Or shall I tell you stories of home lands,
Where ancestors lay.
So, what shall I tell you, would you listen.

John D. Berry, 2014.

Lesley Williams

Morning guys... Hope yesterday was a good one. Up and at em... Been thinking about a generation of lost parents that has left us with a generation of lost children. We need to instill respect and morals back into our lives... Our culture matters... Our family, elders and children matter... It is important we take care of each other but also just as important to appreciate that assistance... We are never entitled anything in this world however we are blessed with what we are given. I hope we realize this in our lifetime instead of at the end when it becomes a regret. There's a reason why our culture and our world is dying... Wake up my friends take your power and your peace back.
