Tribal leader turns down Redskins' invite

Joseph Holley says he was invited by intermediaries to press event in D.C. for the team.
jacksonsun.com

Intermediaries for the Washington NFL team called the leader of a small Nevada tribe Thursday and asked him to come to the Washington region for a news media event with owner Daniel Snyder on Monday, according to the National Congress of American Indians.

Chairman Joseph Holley of the Battle Mountain Band of Te-Moak Tribe of Western Shoshone Indians told NCAI he declined.

Team spokesman Tony Wyllie told USA TODAY Sports that Snyder was out of the country this week and next and there was not another team media event until Wednesday. He did not say if that event would include tribal leaders.

"Someone working for the team called me out of the blue to invite me to a meeting in D.C. with the team and its owners and wanted to know what I thought of the team name," Holley said in an NCAI statement released to USA TODAY Sports. "They did not tell me what the meeting was about, what I would be doing or who else was invited and wanted my answer in just a few hours. My answer was no. I've got responsibilities to my community and members here at home and can't be running off to D.C. at a moment's notice to meet with a football team to do who knows what."

The call came from Corona, Calif., from a company that said it was making the call on behalf of the team, according to NCAI.

Jacqueline Pata, NCAI's executive director, said she thought the Washington team treated American Indians as props.

"If the Washington team wants to talk to tribal leaders, they should do so openly and respectfully, not under cover," Pata said in a statement. "Tribal leaders are busy running sovereign tribal governments. They have agencies, courts and programs to oversee, and they are under constant time pressure. It is yet another insult for the team to suggest that these leaders can simply drop everything to fly to Washington to defend the NFL's use of a dictionary-defined racial slur that denigrates Native Americans."

The invitation to Holley came the same day the team called on its supporters to tweet to Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid using the hashtag #RedskinsPride.

The hashtag was soon trending on Twitter - and many of the early tweets dripped with contempt for the team name.

Last week Reid, D-Nev., and 49 other senators sent letters to NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell calling the name a racial slur and asking him to pressure Snyder into changing it. The team hoped its followers would inundate Reid's office with tweets and e-mails.

"What we saw in the immediate aftermath of the (team's) tweet was a collective, overwhelming outpouring that was heavily critical of the Washington football team," Reid's digital director, Faiz Shakir, wrote in an e-mail to USA TODAY Sports. "It was an utter failure for them, and I hope it causes the organization to reflect on why that occurred."

Perhaps it is not a coincidence that the tribal leader the team apparently tried to recruit Thursday is from Reid's home state.

What is the purpose of a library in the digital age?

As more and more people read the news online, watch movies on Netflix, and order e-books from Amazon, the debate intensifies. Why have libraries when readers can get most of what they need and want from the Internet? What is the purpose of public and academic libraries in an era of Google and Amazon?

Join Dean Kathy Ray as she discusses this fascinating topic about the future of our libraries.

BUILDING WATER SYSTEM CAPACITY: A GUIDE FOR TRIBAL ADMINISTRATORS:

The EPA developed this guidebook to help tribal governments better understand their role in the technical, managerial, and financial health of the water system. The resource is short and easy to read, making it a helpful communication tool for the water system. Click here to download.

TRIBAL O&M COST METHODOLOGY COMING SOON:

One of the barriers to sustainability for tribal water systems is lack of financial capacity, including a clear understanding of routine operations and maintenance costs. The Tribal Infrastructure Task Force, an inter- agency federal workgroup, is preparing to release a methodology report based on a 2-year pilot study of nine American Indian & Alaska Native Village (AI/ANV) utilities. The report will outline how data could be collected on a national basis to improve "understanding of the operation and maintenance costs necessary to ensure critical infrastructure funding decisions are made." The intention is to implement these recommendations in a full scale assessment that will require widespread participation of tribal utilities. Tribes can be proactive for potential later participation. EPA has a variety of resources to help water systems with financial management. One first step would be to complete the financial worksheet on pages 13-14 of this "getting started" guide.

On May 19, the Institute of Museum and Library Services (IMLS) released an updated list of active museums in the U.S. The findings were significant for the field of history, showing that over half of active museums in America are History Organizations.

With this groundbreaking information fresh in our minds, AASLH brings to your immediate attention the work of the National Coalition for History (NCH)—of which AASLH is a proud partner—and its efforts to create a new Congressional History Caucus.

The purpose of the caucus is to provide a forum for members of Congress to share their interest in history and to promote an awareness of the subject on Capitol Hill.

NCH leadership felt it was important for the historical community to be perceived as a resource by Congress instead of just another constituent seeking funding. This effort includes establishing relationships between Members of Congress and history professionals at institutions in their districts.

Recently a “Dear Colleague” letter was circulated by the co-chairs soliciting other Members of Congress to join. The letter explains the Caucus in more detail and outlines its goals and planned activities.

NCH, working through its member organizations, is asking historians and humanities advocates across the country to encourage their representatives to join the caucus.

AASLH is asking all members and professionals in the field of state and local history to contact their representative. Please ask them to join the Congressional History Caucus, and reference the above IMLS findings in your message.
