WASHINGTON - Outdoor recreation advocates are in Washington this week to ask President Obama to create four new national monuments - including one that would protect 350,000 acres of desert 80 miles northeast of Las Vegas.

They're part of the Live Monumental campaign, sponsored by KEEN Footwear - the culmination of a two-month-long RV road trip across the United States, rallying support and gathering signatures for petitions to be delivered to the nation's capital.

Iris Daboda, a tribal member of the Moapa Band of Paiute Indians, said the land is sacred to her people and should be preserved for all to enjoy.

"Gold Butte is special because it tells the story of past history," she said. "To me, I feel like it belongs to all people, that it's there telling us a story for us to carry it on to our future generations."

The area also is important habitat for desert tortoises, burrowing owls and bighorn sheep. In addition, it features many historic mining sites.

Keith Cozzens, spokesman for KEEN Footwear, said his company chose to feature Gold Butte in this campaign because of its beauty and cultural significance.

"Nevada's Gold Butte offers a plethora of red rock formations where Native Americans flourished for more than 3,000 years," he said. "Visitors can still find artifacts and rock shelters from these ancient times there."

KEEN and local advocates are asking the president to use his powers under the Antiquities Act to declare Gold Butte a national monument.

The petition is online at keenfootwear.com/livemonumental.

The BLM has clear cut roughly 35 square miles of Pinion Pine Trees from the Pine Nut Mountains to date. Somehow they think that riding dirt bikes damage the environment, yet destroying 35 square miles of healthy forest is OK. The eradication of the Pinion Trees is a result of what they think will help the Sage Grouse. They are wrong! Tell the Carson City BLM office to stop cutting our Pinion Pines!

Shayne, I thought you might be interested in this. Each year, and sometimes more than once a year, BLM lets the Tribal environmental managers know about proposed parcels of land the BLM advertises to private entities for gas & oil leases. These are parcels that would most likely be used for future geothermal or hydraulic fracturing projects.

I have found that the most effective strategy to manage where these type of projects take place is by walking with BLM and Forest Service representatives and pointing out significant sites and findings. We have found success with this strategy. Vegetation, significant areas (grave sites, hot springs, ceremonial sites), animals, insects, and other determining factors are identified by tribal elders, leaders, and environmental staff, and last year BLM took 2 parcels of their list. We don't have success with "line of site" comments, but we are working on that. (That means the scenic view from certain areas, such as a hilltop, which has cultural significance to most Native Americans.)

This strategy is more effective than our previous process. Before, we would respond to Environmental Impact Statements (EIS), or Environmental Assessments (EA), and make comments on those reports. But really, not much action results from those comments. Now we are stopping the "fracturing" projects by stopping the leasing of the parcels of land, and/or we join the Inter-Disciplinary Teams (IDT) at the start of the projects. This way, the Tribes are involved from the beginning and we voice our concerns, or support, throughout the process. They cannot ignore us because we are part of their team.

Working with a group of people, we will identify certain parcels and schedule site visits to these areas later this year, hopefully before snow comes down. Many of these areas have spiritual significance so I can only share general information after we identify parcels we want taken off the list.

Let me know if you have any questions. Cliff

Information Sharing - Updated Oil and Gas Lease Map and Property Description

Good Morning,

For information sharing purposes, please find attached the finalized 2016 Oil and Gas Lease Sale (proposed) parcel map and property description. BLM Tuscarora Field Office notified the Councils by letter on September 17th 2015, and I wanted to share this information with staff and resource specialists.

The map depicts proposed oil and gas lease parcels that will be sold at auction in March, 2016. The parcels are identified by parcel number and the attached description is keyed by parcel number and lists location and size of proposed parcel. The auction sells the right to explore for fluid minerals for a period of ten years; the sale does not convey title to the parcel to the successful bidder.

The Environmental Assessment for this sale will be released for comment on September 30th. However, Tribes can comment upon the project anytime until the day of the sale in March 2016. Any parcels that your community wishes withdrawn from the sale may be withdrawn with sufficient justification from the tribe.

Last year, after touring proposed parcels subject to the 2015 lease sale, two parcels were withdrawn at the request of the Elko and South Fork Bands of the Te-Moak Tribe.

The Tuscarora Field Office will organize tours of parcels identified by the communities in order to allow on the ground assessment of the areas by community members.

If you have any questions or need addition information please contact me or you can contact project lead Thomas Schmidt at (775) 753-0343 or tschmidt@blm.gov.

Thank you, Dr. Richard D. Adkins, Tosawih Project Manager, Tribal Liaison, Elko District BLM

Janelle Carter Brevard joins IMLS as Director of Communications and Government Affairs

Janelle has a background that includes developing strategic messaging for corporate and community leaders around the nation. She has led executive communications for Hilton Worldwide and Delphi Automotive and worked leading strategic communications teams for Booz Allen Hamilton's intelligence community clients. She is a former senior adviser and speechwriter to Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice and was deputy director of speechwriting at the Department of Commerce under Secretary Donald L. Evans. Recently, Janelle was selected for the Presidential Leadership Scholars Program. As part of the program, Janelle launched the Moss Point Foundation for Academic Excellence, a nonprofit that works to build home libraries for elementary students in her hometown of Moss Point, Mississippi, an area still working to rebuild from Hurricane Katrina. To date, the foundation has distributed more than 1,000 books and is preparing to launch its 2016 spring reading trail for elementary students.

Join White House for Astronomy Night, October 19

The Office of Science and Technology Policy (OSTP) announced that the White House will host an Astronomy Night on October 19, 2015. In addition to inviting students and educators to the South Lawn of the White House to stargaze and participate in other hands-on activities, OSTP is also inviting the astronomy, science, and education communities around the country to join them in making this a nationwide night of observing. Museums, planetariums, colleges and universities, amateur astronomy clubs, and other interested organizations all have the opportunity to participate by hosting their own astronomy nights (or other programs) for their local communities on that same evening.
