Institutional Overview

The Library/Archives Department supports the Society's mission to collect, preserve, interpret, and make available historical materials relating to Arizona, the Southwest, and northern Mexico. The Library/Archives manages non-circulating collections of books, periodicals, maps, photographs, microforms, oral history recordings, vertical files, and manuscript collections that document the cultural, political, social and economic development of the Territory and State of Arizona, the Southwest, and northern Mexico. The Library/Archives Department supports the Society's production of museum exhibits, publications, and education programs, as well as the research needs of professionals and lay historians, professors and students of history, genealogists, authors, journalists, and casual researchers.

Collection Overview

The primary geographical emphasis is on Southern Arizona, including Pima, Santa Cruz, Graham, Pinal, Greenlee, and Cochise counties; secondarily on Arizona and the bordering areas of New Mexico, and Northern Mexico; and finally, on the modern Southwest. The collections encompass the region through several political subdivisions, including New Spain (1540-ca. 1650), Pimeria Alta (ca. 1650-1821), the State of Sonora (1821-1854), the Territory of New Mexico (1848-1863), the Territory of Arizona (1863-1912), and the State of Arizona (1912 to the present).

Materials date from the arrival of the Spanish to the present, although recent materials are collected only if they represent significant people, places, or events in Arizona history.

The topical focus includes history, politics and government, social and cultural populations, business and industry, transportation, natural resources and environmental affairs, military, tourism, United States-Mexico border issues, education, communications, water and land use, medicine and health care, and labor and voluntary associations. Primary areas of focus are:

Populations

- Individuals
- Population groups (women, elderly, etc.)

- Ethnic and racial organizations and groups
- Immigration, migration, and emigration

Settlement

- Pioneer
- Rural
- Small cities and towns
- Urban and neighborhood organizations

Natural Resources and environmental affairs

- Land use and planning
- Industries and business
- Conservation and environmental organizations and issues

Business, Industry, and Manufacturing (including agriculture, ranching, and labor)

- Business related associations and chambers of commerce
- Professional and occupational associations
- Events (strikes, boycotts, etc.)

Medicine and health care

- Individual practitioners, researchers, etc.
- Business and corporations
- Professional and promotional organizations

Recreation and leisure

- Sports and leisure organizations and activities
- Recreation, travel, and tourism
- Cultural, social, and special interest activities

The Library/Archives generally does not collect the papers of an individual associated with an institution its own archives, such as a university; archaeological or anthropological papers; scientific papers, corporate records, or technical materials that have no specific relevance to Arizona history or development; literary manuscripts; or research collections consisting of secondary source materials or photocopies of original materials. The Library does not collect published fiction, children's literature, or government documents.

Biographical files: 12,000 items Books: 50,000 items Maps: 5,000 items

Vermont article on pressure for Federal nuclear waste dump. Not sure of how much of this "protest" is actual grassroots - Power companies have a vested and financial interest in transferring their nuclear waste liabilities to the Federal government and public at large. IMHO

The Native American Community Faces Dangerously High Rates of Food Insecurity

'New studies find that 60 percent of counties with a native majority face dangerously high food insecurity rates. And 23 percent of the small U.S. Indigenous population has terrible access to 'adequate food' - almost twice the national average.' Alex Zielinski, ThinkProgress

The Navajo County Historical Society is a non-profit organization dedicated to the preservation of Holbrook and Navajo County history.

Navajo County Historical Society, acting as a public trust, will collect documents, printed and published materials, photographs, paintings, artifacts, and any other items pertaining to Holbrook, Navajo County, and the surrounding areas. We will preserve and archive all items following standard practices. We will interpret and disseminate Navajo county history through exhibits, print, and other media, and all items under the Historical Society's care will be made available, if appropriate, for research and viewing by the public.

All Museum exhibits are on display at the Navajo County Historic Courthouse, located in Holbrook, AZ. The exhibits include the original courtroom, law library, a telephone area, highlighting the first telephone company in Holbrook, founded by Lloyd Henning, who later served as a state legislator, the original Woodruff Post Office, a turn of the century kitchen, A.B. Schuster's early mercantile store and a chuck wagon used by the Lee and Hennessy families, who were early ranchers.

Collections include thousands of photographs; obituaries of area citizens; newspaper collections dating to the territorial period, including a near-complete set of the Holbrook Tribune News issues dating back Arizona's statehood in 1912; books of territorial and early state law; Navajo, Apache and Hopi collections; and prehistoric artifacts. The museum is in the process of digitizing all photographs.

The society is also in the process of establishing a research center, and researchers can currently put in requests for assistance researching collections.

Preserves, promotes, and perpetuates the cultural heritage, beliefs, and traditional values of the Navajos and other Native Americans for future generations.

The Museum's programs and exhibitions are "designed to interpret the Navajo concepts and value. Navajo Culture is not an inanimate or static culture, and should not be depicted as such, but one that is vibrant and alive, in a healthy state of continuous transition. The Museum believes that the time has come for Native Americans to interpret, depict and record their own cultures through the establishment of institutions such as the Ned A. Hatathli Museum." -- The Museum's Website.

Collections include textiles, basketry, potter, jewelry, beaded items, leather goods, glassware, paintings, photographs, documents, and manuscripts, books and Navajo "jish."

Artifacts: Approx. 3,000 items.
