It is that time of year to help you students plan for an academic life after high school (this information is also for current college students). The Northern California Indian Development Council and the Del Norte Indian Education Center have prepared a comprehensive list of resources, scholarships and writing tips too help ease the process. Please feel free to share this with your students and families.

Here are the top five reasons why you can't afford not to apply for scholarships:

From US News & World Report: <http://www.usnews.com/topics/subjects/scholarships>

1. College costs a lot more than it used to. According to a 2010 Trends in College Pricing report by College Board, since the year 2000, public four-year tuition and fees have increased more than 5 percent annually above inflation. Tuition at public two-year colleges and private four-year colleges also increased by 3 percent above inflation.

See which public colleges offer the lowest [in-state costs and the lowest out-of-state costs.]

2. The economy stinks, and your parents have no money. Well, hopefully that's not 100 percent accurate, but there's definitely some truth to that statement. While parents still very much value contributing to their children's college tuition, the amount that families can afford to contribute has declined. A study commissioned by lender Sallie Mae and conducted by Gallup found that the number of families who planned to cover few if any college costs had risen while the number of parents expecting to cover more than half of the costs had dropped. A similar survey conducted by Longmire and Company, a higher-ed consulting firm, found that 33 percent—the largest percentage of parents—said they planned on contributing less than $5,000 to their

4. child's college tuition, barely enough to cover four years of textbooks.

Learn more about [paying for college.]

3. The cost of college living is up. Unless you plan on living at home and commuting to school—a very good option for a lot of college students—plan on paying a lot more than your older brother or sister paid for your apartment, food, books and supplies. All of these things have gotten more expensive.

4. State support for students has decreased substantially. Although it looks like America may have weathered the worst of the recession (let's hope), many states are still reeling from the economic slump and most have made large cuts in public service funding—including higher education. As a result, public colleges and universities have increased tuition, meaning you're probably going to pay more now.

5. People owe a lot of money. One quarter of the U.S. population—70 million people—owe a collective $700 billion in student loan debt. Sounds like a lot, doesn't it? It is. According to the Institute for College Access and Success, the average college graduate has acquired $24,000 in student loans by the time they graduate, and that figure is likely to increase. Experts say this may be the next financial bubble to burst.

Read more about the [higher education bubble.]

I know what you might be thinking. And the answer is a resounding yes—going to college is worth it. Your college degree will be one of the most lucrative investments you'll make. College graduates earn, on average, $20,000 more per year than someone with just a high school diploma, according to a 2007 report by College Board. The cost of attending college may seem daunting, but that's exactly why finding, applying for, and receiving scholarships are essential to ensure that you won't struggle to make huge student loan payments upon graduation. Scholarships are no longer just a bonus. They're crucial for bridging the gap between the increasing cost of tuition and what you and your family can afford to pay out of pocket. — Michelle Showalter

Untangling an Accounting Tool and an Ancient Incan Mystery

Archaeologists have made a discovery they hope could help unravel one of the most tenacious mysteries of ancient Peru: how to read the knotted string records, known as khipus, kept by the Incas.

A different astronomy and space science related image is featured each day, along with a brief explanation.

In 1923, a dog walked across 2/3 of the U.S. to find his family. Bobbie the Wonder Dog was traveling with his owners and got lost in Indiana. 6 months later he returned home in Oregon after walking over 2,500 miles across the Rocky Mountains in the dead of winter.

It was later discovered that he had 15 different mixes in him, if it was a Pitbull or any other specific breed he would have been lost forever, scientist believe it was the Rez in him that got him home

Once a month my 6 year old son takes me out on a dinner date. He opens doors for me, pulls out my chair, talks about his day & asks me how mine was, pays the bill with money he earned by doing chores, and even tips the waiter/waitress. By doing this I am teaching him how to treat a lady & how to take her on a proper date. How to show that he respects the woman he loves (right now that would be mommy). We put our phone and iPad away (except to take this photo) and sit and talk to each other about our days, things we want to do, etc. I'm teaching him proper table manners and that it's rude to sit on your phone on a date with your mom or with anyone else. He learns the value of money and how to manage it. He learns how to do math as we add up what we want and make sure we have 15% of it to leave for a tip. Yes he is young but I believe this is something he should learn now. It's never too early to teach your child how to properly respect others, especially women. As a woman who has been abused & treated like crap in the past, it's extremely important to me that I teach my son how to show respect. Too many men these days have no idea how to treat women or how to take them on a nice date. It's nice to know my son won't be one of them. ♥

University of Utah - J. Willard Marriott Library Website

The J. Willard Marriott Library at the University of Utah provides research tools, collections and services for students, faculty and researchers. At the J. Willard Marriott Library, we teach our students to be "smart for life," with a solid grounding in critical thinking that will serve them their entire lives. Clearly, libraries have become agents of transformation, development, growth, and opportunity.

Additionally, the Marriott Library is an active participant in the U Signature Experience initiative, which was established with the mission to invigorate students' college experience through exemplary extra-curricular programs. We offer a host of lectures, workshops, and exhibitions, as well as scholarships and internships in which students attain real-world work experience. And, as always, we work with faculty across campus in integrating our collections into coursework to enrich learning.
