The Waiting Game - More links and updates on the DAPL Standoff in Standing Rock Lakota Territory

It's Friday and the tension of waiting is palpable. We are being set up to react, to be reactionary when this Judge gives his ruling today. Standing Rock leadership and spokespersons are urging everyone to keep the peace.

Federal Judge James Boasberg's a very wealthy man, part of the elite which judges are so how could there be any surprise. What I would anticipate is something that seems a bit in our favour but mostly isn't. And if we have any sense we already know they cannot possibly rule in our/the water's favour. The courts are there to protect the interests of private property first and foremost. Any consideration for the water, the land, the air and All our Relations is not likely and only done under great pressure. So folks, keep up the pressure no matter what that judge says today.

This is a struggle that spans the globe. However, the Indigenous women are protecting the water from pollution by oil which should remain in the ground.

It bothers me greatly when people bring in talk about "climate change" which is a topic of incessant argument among scientists who cannot be trusted. The entire carbon picture is twisted and manipulated by the same set of money hungry corporatists. Do not be fooled. And before you have a go at me about climate change, do your research on HAARP. Have you even heard of it??

And not to ignore the related news on the topic of oil vs water.

A few weeks ago in Montreal, a group of people caused the NEB pipeline hearings to be shut down. Many allegations of corruption surround this organization and process. O Canaduh!!!

Energy East pipeline panelist was penalized for insider trading

More on Standing Rock:

Everyone is waiting anxiously for news on Friday how Boasberg will rule. Read this article about the judge and you'll have no doubt of the outcome.

What follows is potential chaos. Will the non violence training help people stay calm or will it pacify them into no resistance?? Serious questions.

Hwy 1806 has already been closed again.

Who the Hell is Bluehair?

Kabe's perspective, being in PA, is important:

STANDING WITH STANDING ROCK!

A number of white supremacists and 'so-called Patriots' are harassing me for writing "NO VIOLENCE, PLZ & TY!" on a couple of YTs. These are calling for the exact opposite of PEACEFUL DIRECT ACTION ... Scary bunch, follow some guy named Mike Bluehair on his YT Channel. I sure hope these STAY AWAY from anywhere near The Protectors. Bluehair, himself, infiltrated the Spirit Rock Camp, causing me much concern. Why? I'd recognized him & some of his 'followers' from the Bundy-Finicum led 'armed citizen militia' "Takeover"/"Occupation", of Burns Paiute Ancestral Lands, [Malheur Nat'l Fish & Wildlife Refuge] near Burns, Oregon, back in Jan/Feb 2016.]

I've ignored their crazy, violent, racist rants. And, I got the word out to beware this guy w/ Blue Hair. Hadn't heard a peep until last evening/early this a.m. I felt it time to reply & can only hope the [long] time it took me to carefully word my replies to two [right] wing nuts, and show them why VIOLENCE IS NOT ACCEPTABLE, NOR WANTED, AT STANDING ROCK might bore a peep hole through their Neanderthal-like thick skulls! Also, by remaining silent, I worry some might think their 'Comments' might reflect "The Peaceful Protectors", because of this Bluehair guy being so cozy & filing/interviewing a certain person in whose lodge he was staying, inside the camp. Too, I'm concerned some in a 'separate camp' may be some of these... I sure hope I'm wrong! Hard to know who to trust, but 'trust, I guess we must'???

Tobe writes the following:

...Sister, two medicine people that I am aware of have said that the "red road" is open to all people. One was Harry Bird (Pine Ridge) and the other was Russel Means who said to white people "you are the new indians".

...You and me at this moment have power in our hands. I say that in submission to the elders, we can do this. The great power in our hands is not that these guys have guns, the power is in overcoming fear and learning how to trust.

That is the great power. Understanding produces trust and trust overcomes fear and then love. Love overcomes all.

I have met Stuart Rhodes, the head of Oath Keepers and he doesn't come across as a violent gun nut, he comes off as a scholar. He's friendly and engaging. I think he really believes in people and how we should have "sovereignty" and get to live our lives in our own ways. His whole trip is he took an oath to protect and defend the Constitution as a document.

...it's clear that they literally hunger and thirst for guidance.

I found this out again in jail. They saw me praying, they heard a song and my fellow inmates were asking me to pray for them. People need us like they need food and water. That's always been clear right?

How many times have we heard "somehow I needed this all my life and never knew it" when they hear the prayer songs? The first time they hear the drum.

They are people of incredible passion and power, they are natural born killers but somehow they realize they are thirsty and starving.

Who and what are we but the only people who can legitimatize them? We alone by the power of the wampums. The treaties. Constitutional law in the USA is by definition as high and powerful as the rest of the law it relies upon.

These guys actually get this. Moral authority on this continent begins with us.

I have also learned a lot from these people both in their success and their mistakes. Their mistakes primarily come from a lack of consideration of consequences. Again, we're great at considering consequences. We survived a freaking genocide.

What makes this possibly awesome is the fact that these guys are actual warriors, they are up to date with weapons of every type and kind, they are media-savvy, they have their own networks. And while I am pledged to non-violence, I have learned that it's nice to have muscle.

I can speak more about this, how I was raised to trust both Algonquin and the 5 Houses (now 6). And the wonderful beautiful awesome vision of Onandaga. The Tree. Only we know the location of The Tree. Only by including people can we keep The Tree alive.

We must not ratchet this thing up to violence. Even if some isolated bit of violence occurs—the work of a panicky individual (as in the death of Crazy Horse in 1877) or the work of a hothead (as in the assassination of Sitting Bull in 1890) on either side—everyone involved in this moment should vow to avoid any further escalation of violence, so that this crisis does not spin out of control. Meanwhile, the leaders of every stakeholder group (pipeline company, the Standing Rock Sioux (Lakota), pan-Indian gatherers, non-Indian allies of the protest, and all white government and law enforcement agencies) must do everything in their power to educate, inform, and restrain their constituencies. It would be better if the rhetoric from all quarters was civil rather than extreme.

Today's encore selection -- from Debt: The First 5,000 Years by David Graeber. Saying "please" and "thank you" is not a universal custom -- there are societies such as the Inuit, where it is not the case. In fact it first took hold in Western society during the commercial revolution of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries as evidence of the democratization of society -- our desire to view everyone as equals. Before that, saying please and thank you was a way to show deference to a lord or master. "Thank you" derives from "think," it originally meant, "I will remember what you did for me" -- and "please" is short for "if you please," "if it pleases you to do this":

"Consider the custom, in American society, of constantly saying 'please' and 'thank you.' To do so is often treated as basic morality: we are constantly chiding children for forgetting to do it, just as the moral guardians of our society -- teachers and ministers, for instance -- do to everybody else. We often assume that the habit is universal, but as the Inuit hunter made clear, it is not. Like so many of our everyday courtesies, it is a kind of democratization of what was once a habit of feudal deference: the insistence on treating absolutely everyone the way that one used only to have to treat a lord or similar hierarchical superior.

"In fact, the English 'please' is short for 'if you please,' 'if it pleases you to do this' -- it is the same in most European languages (French s'il vous plait, Spanish por favor). Its literal meaning is 'you are under no obligation to do this.' 'Hand me the salt. Not that I am saying that you have to!' This is not true; there is a social obligation, and it would be almost impossible not to comply. But etiquette largely consists of the exchange of polite fictions (to use less polite language, lies). When you ask someone to pass the salt, you are also giving them an order; by attaching the word 'please,' you are saying that it is not an order. But, in fact, it is.

"In English, 'thank you' derives from 'think,' it originally meant, 'I will remember what you did for me' -- which is usually not true either -- but in other languages (the Portuguese obrigado is a good example) the standard term follows the form of the English 'much obliged' -- it actually does mean 'I am in your debt.' The French merci is even more graphic: it derives from 'mercy,' as in begging for mercy; by saying it you are symbolically placing yourself in your bene-factor's power -- since a debtor is, after all, a criminal. Saying 'you're welcome,' or 'it's nothing' (French de rien, Spanish de nada) -- the latter has at least the advantage of often being literally true -- is a way of reassuring the one to whom one has passed the salt that you are not actually inscribing a debit in your imaginary moral account book. So is saying 'my pleasure' -- you are saying, 'No, actually, it's a credit, not a debit -- you did me a favor because in asking me to pass the salt, you gave me the opportunity to do something I found rewarding in itself' ...

"All of this is a relatively recent innovation. The habit of always saying 'please' and 'thank you' first began to take hold during the commercial revolution of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries -- among those very middle classes who were largely responsible for it. It is the language of bureaus, shops, and offices, and over the course of the last five hundred years it has spread across the world along with them. It is also merely one token of a much larger philosophy, a set of assumptions of what humans are and what they owe one another, that have by now become so deeply ingrained that we cannot see them."
