Description

This collection comprises the Board Minutes of the Southern Pacific Railroad and its subsidiaries, Mechanical Department plans and specifications of the rolling stock of the Southern Pacific and its subsidiaries, the Valuation Department records documenting financial transactions and value of the rolling stock of the company.

Background

The Southern Pacific Railroad was founded in 1865 and was purchased in 1869 by Collis Huntington, Leland Stanford, Charles Crocker and Mark Hopkins, better known as the Big Four. It was the first railroad to connect Los Angeles to the rest of California and its lines extended as far as New Orleans. In 1901, the Union Pacific Railroad bought 38% of Southern Pacific stock and took control of the company, but the Union Pacific was ultimately forced to divest these shares in 1912 by the U.S. Supreme Court in an anti-trust case. During World War II, the Southern Pacific Co. played a major role in military transportation in the US, transporting personal, and equipment along the west coast. In 1983, Southern Pacific and Santa Fe Railroads announced their intentions to merge and organize company into the Santa Fe Southern Pacific Corporation, but the merger was rejected in 1987. In 1996, the Union Pacific acquired Southern Pacific, making Union Pacific the largest railroad in the United States.

Historical Note

The Southern Pacific Railroad was founded in San Francisco in 1865, and in 1868 it was purchased by the "Big Four" railroad tycoons of California, Collis P. Huntington, Leland Stanford, Mark Hopkins, and Charles Crocker. In 1870, during the construction of the first transcontinental railway, the company merged with the Central Pacific to form the largest railroad company in the western U.S. By 1876 the railroad had opened service between Oakland and Los Angeles, and by 1883 a second transcontinental route had been built from Los Angeles to Chicago. In 1885 the Southern Pacific assumed control over all operations of the Central Pacific, and in 1913 the U.S. Supreme Court forced the Union Pacific Railroad to sell its stock in the Southern Pacific Company. In 1988 the Southern Pacific Company was taken over by Rio Grand Industries, and in 1996 the Southern Pacific was purchased again by the Union Pacific Railroad.

In 1887 the Southern Pacific assumed control of the Oregon and California Railroad, which had been established through a reorganization of the California and Oregon Railroad in 1865. The Oregon and California came to be known as the "East Side Line" since it competed with the Oregon Central, or "West Side Line," to build the rail link between Portland and San Francisco. In 1870, magnate Ben Holladay assumed control of the Oregon and California, although later financial losses led to his displacement by Henry Villard and the Northern Pacific after 1873. In 1887 the line from Portland to Oakland, California, was completed and the Oregon and California came under the control of the Southern Pacific Railroad.

In the following decades the Oregon and California Railroad became the focus of a notorious land-fraud litigation. This was the result of the U.S. Government's method of subsidizing railroad construction through the grants of alternating parcels of property along the routes. As a condition of these land grants, the railroad was required to sell the parcels to "settlers" at $2.50 an acre. However, the Oregon and California evaded this requirement and sold properties to large land developers at high prices. These fraudulent practices became a public issue, in part through the investigative reporting of the Oregonian newspaper in 1904. A Federal investigation, instigated by President Theodore Roosevelt, was launched around that time, and the case reached the U.S. Supreme Court in 1915. The following year, Congress voted to repossess the railroad lands, with compensation to the company at the $2.50 per acre originally intended for settlers. The controversy continued throughout the 20th century, however, as questions arose over revenues from timber sales and other issues.

In 1927 the Southern Pacific bought the Oregon, California, and Eastern Railway, which was begun by R. E. Strahorn in the early 1900s. The line ran eastward from Klamath Falls, Oregon, to Sprague River, and eventually reached the town of Bly. It was operated jointly by the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Great Northern Railroad after 1928.

The Northern Pacific Terminal Company was founded in 1882. It was owned jointly by the Oregon and California Railroad, the Northern Pacific Railroad, and the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company. In 1886 it purchased 14 blocks in Portland from the Oregon Central Railroad, and between 1890 and 1896 the company constructed the present Portland Union Station. In 1965 the name was changed to the Portland Terminal Railroad Company.

Content Description

The collection was assembled by the Oregon Historical Society from a variety of sources. The most significant series is a large set of blueprints, probably collected by engineer Robert L. Donald, consisting of drawings for bridges, trestles, outbuildings, generic stations, locomotives, and a variety of other equipment. These date primarily from the 1890s and 1900s and were apparently parts of sets produced by the railroad's central offices. Most of the bridges and other structures were located in Oregon and California. A large portion of the drawings were identified with serial numbers, and these numbers are reflected in the indexes filed in the first folder of the collection.

Another important series contains records of the Oregon and California Railroad, which include minutes of board meetings, 1870-1929, and legal materials relating to land litigation cases. Also of note are photocopies and originals of employee timetables, primarily for lines in Oregon, and dating from 1892 to 1987. The collection also includes: publications and documents relating to the Northern Pacific Terminal Company; Southern Pacific Company publications; freight tariff books, 1895-1898; work order books, circa 1937-1967; corporate minutes, 1915-1974, of the Oregon, California, and Eastern Railway; general correspondence; stock books of the Oregon Central Railroad Company and the Willamette Valley Railroad Company; and ephemera.

Public Comment To Inform the Design of a Consent- Based Siting Process for Nuclear Waste Storage and Disposal Facilities

Thursday, July 28, 2016

As a tribal community stakeholder group, the Native Community Action Council (NCAC) continues to analyze and advocate on behalf of the land the people of the Great Basin. We have only one land, one air and one water. Last year the NRC admitted that radiation will discharge into the groundwater from the proposed Yucca Mountain high level nuclear waste repository currently undergoing licensing. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) Staff were directed to consider disproportionate impact to low income and minority populations. The NRC staff did not. Then, consequentially the NRC found that impacts to Native Americans will be minimal. We view the NRC as abdicating responsibility, an inordinate act of negligence.

We want to advise others from our experience as down-winders, victims of nuclear weapons testing, and as stakeholders in the siting of the proposed Yucca Mountain high level nuclear waste repository. As "a party with standing" in the Yucca Mountain licensing proceedings, the NCAC's primary contention is that the Department of Energy cannot meet the requirement of ownership and that significant legal encumbrances exist, disqualifying the site under the NRC regulation, 10 CFR 63 Land Ownership and Control.<sup>1</sup> Yucca Mountain is Western Shoshone domain defined by the 1863 Treaty of Ruby Valley and the US cannot prove ownership. The proposed Yucca Mountain repository is a violation of treaty of Ruby Valley and the Western Shoshone do not consent to the inclusion of any part of Newe Sogobia into the boundaries or jurisdiction of any US state or territory.<sup>2</sup>

Yucca Mountain is the longest and most complicated legal proceeding ever contemplated in human history. We are the only non-federally funded party to the proceedings, which puts the NCAC at a disadvantage in the proceedings. Since selection of Yucca Mountain in 1987 by Congress, the DOE has not considered any argument made by the Western Shoshone that does not support licensing by the NRC. Our well documented comments about disproportionate burden of risk from exposure to radiation territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory;...

§ 63.121 Requirements for ownership and control of interests in land.

(a) Ownership of land.

(1) The geologic repository operations area must be located in and on lands that are either acquired lands under the jurisdiction and control of DOE, or lands permanently withdrawn and reserved for its use.

(2) These lands must be held free and clear of all encumbrances, if significant, such as:...

2

U.S. Statutes at Large, 1863, v. 12, pp. 209-214 Provided, further, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to impair the rights of person or property now pertaining to the Indians in said Territory, so long as such rights shall remain unextinguished by treaty between the United States and such Indians, or to include any territory which, by treaty with any Indian tribe, is not, without the consent of said tribe, to be included within the in fallout and land rights treaty are ignored.

3 Other state and counties have been funded for the past 30 years with the $15 billion spent from the nuclear waste fund for site characterization. This is unfair and constitutes environmental racism. In 2015 President Obama found that: "In accordance with the Act, I find the development of a repository for the disposal of high-level radioactive waste resulting from atomic energy defense activities only is required." Disposal cost for any civilian high-level waste will increase substantially. Also, the US could choose any location for high-level waste disposal under "national security."

The Great Basin is a "crushed rock aquifer" with all tribal communities sharing in the "one water." All tribal communities are stakeholders. The US has an obligation to preserve the water quality and clarity necessary to meet the future needs of the Western Shoshone people. Deliberate contamination with radiation cannot be tolerated now, or at any time in the future as contemplated by the NRC.

Radiation protection can change putting tribal communities at risk. To meet the current EPA radiation protections standards, in 100 years, titanium drip shields will be installed at Yucca Mountain. The amount of titanium is more than is currently used in the Air Force with $15 billion dollars or more cost. We do not believe promises of what Congress will do in 100 years. We believe that the DOE should meet the radiation protection standards without the drip shields that may never be installed.

Our final contention at the NRC licensing of Yucca Mountain is that the EPA inappropriately used the "reasonably maximally exposed individual" modeling (RMEI), applying it to Native Americans when setting radiation protection standards for Yucca Mountain. We informed the EPA that a disproportionate burden of risk to Native Americans exists based on lifestyle differences that was not considered. We continue to make an important point to the DOE, EPA and now NRC, that all have failed to address: calculate risk studies using a culturally appropriate context for Western Shoshone. The EPA, DOE and NRC have all failed to investigate cumulative risk to Native Americans living in community.

Our experience as a Native American tribal community stakeholder group is a cautionary tale of what to expect in the characterization and licensing of nuclear facilities. We want to state again that, the current ongoing licensing of Yucca Mountain constitutes environmental racism.
