SBA Announces $18.8 Million to Support Small Business Trade Growth

2016 State Trade Expansion Program (STEP) awards support state-level investments in small business export programs

Washington, DC – Administrator Maria Contreras-Sweet , head of the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA), today announced $18.85 million to support export growth among American small businesses. The funding was awarded through SBA's competitive State Trade Expansion Program (STEP).

Contreras-Sweet heralded the news as a boon for America's small businesses: “Exporting provides tremendous opportunities for America’s small businesses and entrepreneurs. Two-thirds of the world’s purchasing power can be found outside of the United States, but only about one percent of America’s 28 million small businesses are reaching customers beyond our borders. Exporting is an important growth opportunity for our small businesses that are ready to expand their reach into new and increasingly borderless global markets. These STEP awards , in addition to SBA's export loans and U.S. Export Assistance Centers , help small businesses across our nation have the tools, resources and relationships they need to take their businesses global.”

STEP awards were created to advance key priorities identified in the President's National Export Initiative, namely to expand the base of small businesses that become exporters and to make the exporting process as easy as possible for small businesses.

These awards are granted to U.S. states and territories to support programs that help small businesses expand their export-related activities. This includes participation in foreign trade missions, foreign market sales trips, subscription services for access to international markets, as well as the design of international marketing campaigns, export trade show exhibits, export training workshops and more.

STEP funds allow small businesses the opportunity to meet foreign buyers face-to-face at trade shows or on trade missions, and complement SBA's export loan guaranty programs , which can finance the working capital needed to complete export orders and in turn help finance the expansion of production facilities due to export success. Loans are available up to $5 million. More information can be obtained from SBA's Export Finance Managers located at 21 U.S. Export Assistance Centers across the country.

Recipients of STEP awards in the first three rounds (FY 2011, 2012, 2014) reported a strong return on federal taxpayer investment, generating $22 in U.S. small business export sales for every $1 awarded.

FY2016 (Year 5) STEP Awards

Awardees were determined via a competitive process, as required by the Trade Facilitation and Trade Enforcement Act of 2015. (List available)

Obama administration makes good on second settlement with 17 American Indian tribes for \$492 million

By Walter Einkenkel    RSS

REBLOGGED BY

- Barriers and Bridges
- Native American Netroots
- First Nations News & Views
- Daily Kos Liberation League

The U.S. has agreed to a $492 million in a settlement with 17 American Indian Tribes ending decades and, in some cases, centuries of disputes between the U.S. government and numerous tribes.

“These historical grievances were a barrier to our shared progress toward a brighter future,” said Attorney General Lynch. “With today’s announcement, those barriers have been removed and decades of contention have been ended honorably and fairly. These settlements reflect the shared vision, the mutual respect and the enduring partnership that we hope to achieve between tribes and the federal government and I look forward to all that we will achieve together in the days to come.”

“Settling these long-standing disputes reflects the Obama Administration’s continued commitment to reconciliation and empowerment for Indian Country,” said Secretary Jewell. “As we turn the page on past challenges in our government-to-government relationship with tribes, we’re moving forward with tribal governments to ensure proper management of tribal trust assets. I commend the Department of Justice, our Interior Solicitors, tribal leaders and other key officials for recognizing the importance of communication and mutual respect, opening a new era of trust between the United States Government and tribal governments.”

The disputes were concerning the United States’ mismanagement of tribal lands, stretching back into our country’s history.

Those treaty responsibilities include agreements dating back to the 1800s that made the U.S. government the trustee for huge swaths of tribal land. The Department of the Interior says it manages almost 56 million acres of land on behalf of tribes, and handles at least 100,000 leases on that land for a wide variety of uses including housing, timber harvest, farming, livestock grazing, oil and gas extraction. More than 250 tribes have some assets held in trust by the federal government.

Before the Obama administration could turn to the business of settling the 100-plus lawsuits by tribes, it had to resolve a 13-year class-action lawsuit alleging the government failed to pay individual people billions of dollars in profits from land that had been seized from American Indians. A $3.4 billion deal was reached in 2009.

The Obama administration settled more than \$1 billion with various tribes back in 2012. As Melody McCoy, an attorney with the Native American Rights Fund, tells NPR:

The settlements announced Monday are the second round of agreements. McCoy says that since Obama took office, there have been 95 total settlements with tribes, and that 11 more, some of which she handles, are in active negotiation. "It is quite an accomplishment," she says.

While the bar for the American government’s relationship with Native American groups could not be set any lower, President Obama has done far and away the best job at changing the United States’ government’s relationship in regards to our country’s original people.

Domestic Violence Awareness Month - Evolution and History

The month of October is dedicated to DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AWARENESS but how did this month of awareness begin? In October 1981 the "Day of Unity" was created to bring advocates across the nation who are working to end the violence against women and children (National Resource Center on Domestic Violence, 2012). Soon the "Day of Unity", which is the first Monday in October, evolved into an entire week of domestic violence awareness activities which were conducted on the local, state and national levels. Various programs sponsor themed activities to encompass prevention education about domestic violence. Some common theme topics include: remembering those who have passed away because of domestic violence, celebrating the survivors of domestic violence and connecting with other service providers to further collaborate in efforts to end the violence in the community.

October of 1987 marked the first year of DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AWARENESS month being observed (NRCDV, 2012). Also in October of 1987 the first National Domestic Violence toll-free hotline became available to the public. In order to create legislation involvement the U.S. Congress passed Public Law 101-112 which declared October as National Domestic Violence Awareness Month (NRCDV, 2012).

Native American and Alaskan Native women are statistically higher to suffer more violent crimes than any other demographic group within the United States. The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) was originally passed in 1994 and designed to improve the criminal justice and community based-responses to violence against women, including sexual and domestic violence, in the United States (The Tribal Court Clearinghouse, 2012). The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) has been reauthorized three times. President Barack Obama reauthorized VAWA for the third time on March 7, 2013, and as of March 7, 2015 tribes can begin to criminally prosecute non-Indian offenders for domestic violence, dating violence, or violation of civil protection orders on reservations (The Tribal Court Clearinghouse, 2012).

During the month of October take some time to research and learn about the ongoing challenges of domestic and sexual violence in the Native American and Alaskan Native community.

If you want more information or more importantly, if you are a victim or know of anyone who is needing domestic violence assistance know there is help available. NATIVE HEALTH offers assistance to victims of domestic violence and sexual assault. Services include victim case management, counseling, prevention education and women's empowerment group.

Together we can break the cycle of violence in the community. For more information please call (602) 279-5262, ext. 3210 or email Anisia.
