Bob Fulkerson

My heart goes out to Autumn Harry and others who were in the line of fire last night. As Carolyn Harry said, "This world can only get better." Indeed, these are the last throes and violent fits of a dying system.

Carolyn Harry I hope the State of Nevada can positively use the tragic situation to recognize this thinking mirrors the exact point being made- keeping Columbus Day is psychologically harmful and now physically harming to innocent people trying to advocate for a change.

Celebrating a Year of Triumph for Indigenous and Environmental Rights

"Welcome to Blockadia," environmental author-activist Naomi Klein writes in her 2014 best seller, This Changes Everything, "a roving transnational conflict zone that is cropping up with increasing frequency and intensity wherever extractive projects are attempting to dig and drill." Blockadia, she continues, is the spear's tip of the movement for climate justice, a united front of families and communities and students and other concerned citizens fighting to protect water and the air from pollution, and to stop the atmosphere from being used as an open sewer. Most importantly, Blockadia is working.

While Blockadia takes many forms in many different places, often those on the front lines are indigenous nations. Native communities' unique land rights (they are sovereign nations within nation-states) and fierce connection to the earth bolsters their moral stature as environmental defenders. In recent years, newly emboldened indigenous nations around the world have won major victories to prevent fossil fuel extraction or reckless development projects. As the urgency of climate action increases, so does the necessity of every triumph.

On Indigenous Peoples Day, here are five celebratory moments to honor from the past year.

Sacred Be Dammed: Raising the dam would swell Shasta Lake by 13 percent, but it also would flood about 5,000 acres of land, including sites sacred to the Winnemem Wintu, a Native American tribe.

The Fight to Protect Bears Ears: A coalition of five Native American tribes is pushing President Barack Obama to create a new national monument in Utah as opposition mounts.

Helping Taos Make Business From Tradition: Two social justice veterans meld Native American traditions with modern technology to create a better food system.

In honor of #IndigenousPeoplesDay, OMCA spotlights a very important Native Californian basket in our collection. This Ohlone basket—created by Linda Yamane in 2010—is the first of its kind to be made in more than 250 years. With only a few dozen known to exist worldwide, Ohlone baskets are rare partly due to the tribe's practice of burning one's personal possessions upon death, as well as the radical culture change brought about in the Bay Area by the missionaries and early settlers. ### Regional Emergency Alerts

Regional Notification System

Washoe County has partnered with the Cities of Reno and Sparks to institute a telephone notification system for use in times of crisis. The system is known as "Code Red."

Try watching this video on www.youtube.com

When a crisis occurs, local public safety officials have three methods to alert the public:

1. Media press releases written by local government public information officers (PIO) and delivered to local radio, television, newspapers, and government webmasters.
2. The Emergency Alert System (EAS). This system is described in detail on this website. Messages are rebroadcast on radio and television.
3. The Code Red Notification System. This system uses a series of remote computers and telephone lines to relay a recorded message.

While no system can ever be guaranteed to be disaster proof, by using these three methods local officials make every effort to keep the public informed. Again, Washoe County makes no guarantees. However, by signing up you will be included in the database for emergency notifications. CITIZENS: If you have an unlisted number, or wish to list your cell phone or work phone for emergency notification, fill out the form on the enrollment page.

Earthquake and Weather Alert Systems

Earthquakes

The Nevada Broadcast of Earthquakes (NBE) is an experimental earthquake warning and response system. NBE is a project of the Nevada Seismological Laboratory at the University of Nevada, Reno. The system is designed to list measurable earthquakes, with an attached map detailing the location of the earthquake. This listing shows all earthquakes throughout Nevada.

Citizens can log onto the Nevada Seismological Laboratory, Nevada Broadcast of Earthquakes or call 775.784.4975 to learn more about seismic activity in their region.

Severe Weather

Citizens can register for severe weather alerts through the National Weather Service. These alerts are designed to help citizens prepare for major storms that are forecasted to affect our region. The Emergency Email and Wireless Network provides breaking weather forecast news directly to email accounts, with links to the relevant radar maps. Log onto The Emergency & Wireless Network to register.
