Chiloquin Held each year on the fourth weekend in August. This annual event marks the anniversary of the Restoration of the Klamath Tribes, which includes; the Klamath, Modoc and Yahooskin Bands of the Snake Indians. In 1954 the Klamath Tribes were terminated. But after many years of struggling, hard work and determination, the Tribes regained federal recognition by an act of Congress, Public Law 99-398.

With restoration in 1986 the Tribes began to develop a full scope of programs which...

For the UCB grads: After prolonged deliberation by leaders of the university movement, the surrounding townsite was named for George Berkeley, Bishop of Cloyne, who had visited America in 1729 in the hope of founding an educational institution for the evangelization and education of "aboriginal Americans." Finding the time not right, he provided the model for Columbia University and endowed three scholarships at Yale. In America, Berkeley saw the beginning of a new experiment, expressed in a verse that held special meaning for Californians:

"Westward the course of empire takes its way;
The four first acts already past.
A fifth shall close the drama with the day;
Time's noblest offspring is the last."

Federal Water Tap:

36: Consecutive years that world glaciers, on average, have lost mass. The loss of ice last year was one of the worst on record. The figures come from the State of the Climate report, which details other warming trends. (NOAA)

36: Minimum number of feet below the Missouri River bed that the Dakota Access Pipeline will be drilled. The pipeline will be 92 feet below Lake Oahe, a large federal reservoir. (U.S. Army Corps of Engineers)

$US 3 million: Penalty that Consol Energy, a coal company, will pay for violating the Clean Water Act. To prevent future discharges of salt-laden mine waste into the Ohio River and its tributaries, Consol agreed to change its management practices and install new treatment equipment to bring its discharges into compliance. (Justice Department)

14.5 billion: Bushels of U.S. corn production forecast for 2016, which would be a record high. (U.S. Department of Agriculture)

Army Corps Pipeline Permit

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers granted approval for Energy Transfer Partners, a Texas company, to cross federal property and drill a long-distance crude oil pipeline beneath the Missouri River and Lake Oahe, a large reservoir. The Dakota Access Pipeline is a 1,100-mile pipeline that will move up to 570,000 barrels of crude oil per day from North Dakota to Illinois.

Omaha District Commander Col. John W. Henderson determined that the project did not require a more-rigorous environmental impact statement. The corps' review noted that the pipeline is more reliable, safer, and economical than trucking or rail transport of oil.

"I have evaluated the anticipated environmental, economic, cultural, and social effects, and any cumulative effects of the Proposed Action and determined that the Proposed Action is not injurious to the public interest and will not impair the usefulness of the federal projects." — Omaha District Commander Col. John W. Henderson determining that the Dakota Access Pipeline will not have a significant impact on U.S. Army Corps facilities.

The approval immediately brought a lawsuit from the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe to prevent construction. The pipeline would cross beneath Lake Oahe a few miles upstream of the tribe's drinking water intake. The corps argues that the risks are small and acceptable because the pipeline will be buried, not laid on the lake bed and that pipeline monitoring and response plans provide an adequate safety margin.

White House Climate Change Directive

The Obama administration published guidelines for how federal agencies should consider climate change and greenhouse gas emissions in environmental reviews. For example, how water availability for a proposed project could change over 30 to 50 years. The goal is to have a consistent federal approach for reviews.

The guidance, however, is not a regulation and could change under a new administration.

Army Corps Reservoir Manuals Require Closer Watch

The Government Accountability Office said that the Army Corps of Engineers needs to be more meticulous in its review of reservoir water control manuals. These are the rule books that guide more than 700 dams nationwide, telling operators when to release water, how much, and to whom.

Revisions to the manuals are important for several reasons: reservoir operations may need to be adjusted to match changing runoff patterns in a warming climate. Or, the water in a reservoir may need to be reallocated, to reflect urban growth for instance.

Wyoming Drought Report

The National Integrated Drought Information System (NIDIS) published its first state-level drought outlook, for Wyoming. The outlook includes a relatively new prediction tool called the evaporative demand drought index, which gauges the sponginess of the air and detects fast-developing areas of dryness.

The Wyoming outlook will be published monthly through October, Chad McNutt of NIDIS told Circle of Blue. The group will consider expanding the outlook to other states. McNutt said that NIDIS is working with South Dakota officials to develop their own version.

Mixing Oil Production and Groundwater

When oil production occurs near aquifers how to tell if drilling is polluting the water? The U.S. Geological Survey is testing one method: the use of chemical tracers. A study in California noted that groundwater chemistry is complex and multiple tracers are needed to pinpoint the origin of contaminants.

Water Resources Development Act

Bloomberg BNA looks at the actions needed to get the multibillion-dollar water infrastructure bill passed. Congress has only eight weeks to approve new legislation, assuming lawmakers keep to their schedule. The water resources act typically funds ports, locks, and levees, but the Senate added drinking water provisions in response to Flint, which complicates the process.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS) stood strong this week against Alaska's efforts to allow the excessive and extreme killing of bears, wolves and other iconic predators on national wildlife refuges across the state.

FWS finalized a new rule to prohibit despicable practices like aerial gunning, killing mother wolves and bears with young, using bait to lure predators and trapping.

How could a state even contemplate activities like these on America's refuges?

Alaska wants to kill wolves, bears and other predators in order to artificially inflate moose and other game animal populations so that hunters have more to shoot.

And advocates of these excessive and extreme killing practices have friends on Capitol Hill.

Even before the ink had dried on the new FWS conservation rule, special interests in Congress were advancing measures to allow inhumane killings on federal wildlife refuges across Alaska. Such proposals have already passed the full U.S. House of Representatives twice.

And other anti-federal government forces are watching closely. If Alaska's gruesome plans are allowed to go forward, it could set a precedent for state-led invasions of federal lands in the lower 48!

Support FWS' decision to stand strong for the wildlife we love.

Thank you for all you do!

Sincerely, Jamie Rappaport Clark, President, Defenders of Wildlife
