Respect Our Water - 500 mile protest

More Calendar

But the Powwow Trail is still on.

Shinnecock PowWow

Extract: <http://www.motherjones.com/environment/2016/08/new-american-mega-pipeline-youve-never-heard>

DisRespect: The pipeline will cross through sacred lands and pass under the Missouri River twice. For the Standing Rock Sioux,

the Missouri provides drinking water and irrigation, while its riverbanks grow innumerable plants of cultural import, including sage and buffalo berries. The tribe launched a campaign called

"Respect Our

Water" and staged a 500-mile relay race in protest, hoping to sway the Army Corps of Engineers in the permitting process.

Last weekend, a group of 30 Native

youth completed a three-week run from North Dakota to Washington, DC, where they delivered a petition of 160,000 signatures opposing the pipeline's construction.

Now, even though the Corps has given the go-ahead, the tribe has not given up the fight. They recently filed suit against the Corps in federal court. The suit seeks an injunction, asserting that the pipeline will "damage and destroy sites of great historic, religious, and cultural significance," a violation of the National Historic Preservation Act.

Though the pipeline seems to be a done deal, resistance of all types continues. Last week, the Des Moines Register reported that authorities are investigating suspected arson against the ETP's heavy machinery. The fires, three separate incidents across two Iowa counties, resulted in nearly \$1 million in damage to bulldozers and backhoes. The acts appeared to be intentional incidents of monkeywrenching.

On Thursday, a group of protesters, including the Standing Rock Sioux and their allies, gathered in North Dakota to oppose the pipeline, blocking the construction site. The police ultimately broke up the demonstration, resulting in at least five arrests.

Sept. 1 (THE) Tribal Housing Excellence Academy (see July 19 webinar for more info)
THE Academy works with organizations to move an actual housing development from concept to construction.

The key to our approach is in leveraging new sources of funding and our faculty's experience achieving exceptional results in developing housing on- and off trust lands, as well as for low-income and over-income populations (including essential service personnel). THE Academy will combine on-site organizational and project assistance with five off-site training weeks that include intensive coursework, networking with peers, industry professionals and financial institutions, and support from seasoned housing development experts.

THE Academy provides practical, comprehensive, and intensive skill training in housing development strategies and techniques using a curriculum designed specifically to address the cultural norms as well as the unique legal, regulatory and other approval requirements for development activities on native lands. Electronic Applications Due by Sept. 1 to:

epiekarz@rcac.org .

Sept. 6, 2016 Promise Neighborhoods grant competition (US. Dept of Education)
