Oil Glut? Here Comes Some More!

By CLIFFORD KRAUSS

Oil finds in Texas and Alaska come at a time when the industry is struggling with low prices and faces pressure to leave hydrocarbons in the ground.

International Meeting on Indigenous Child Health – Call for Abstracts/Proposals

The International Meeting on Indigenous Child Health (IMICH), held every two years, focuses on innovative clinical care models and community-based public health approaches for children and youth in First Nations, Inuit, Métis, American Indian, Alaska Native and other Indigenous communities around the world.

Co-hosted by the Canadian Paediatric Society and the American Academy of Pediatrics, this meeting brings together health care providers and researchers working with children, youth and families in American Indian, Alaska Native, First Nations, Inuit, Métis and other Indigenous communities. Participants share model programs and research, learn about prevalent health problems, and acquire practical skills for use in community settings. Opportunities to share knowledge and support one another's efforts, to network and develop partnerships are built into the program.

The deadline to submit an abstract is November 3. Click here to submit your abstract!

Songwriter [VIDEO]

Una Mae Carlisle, a pianist and singer during the 1930s and 1940s, auditioned for the Cotton Club, performed solo, and recorded in Europe. Born on December 26, 1915, to American Indian and black parents, she started singing at the age of three in her hometown of Xenia, Ohio. By the age of 17, she was working at a local radio station.

Fats Waller heard her play and asked her to join his band. He invited her to play on his radio show at station WLW in Cincinnati during Christmas week when Carlisle turned 17. She was still in high school at the time, and her mother had approved the Christmas vacation in Cincinnati because Carlisle was to stay with her elder sister.

When her vacation was over, she refused to return home, becoming a professional musician working with Waller at WLW. Fats' contract with WLW expired in 1934 and he left Cincinnati for New York. Carlisle's voice can be heard along with Waller's on the recording "I Can't Give You Anything but Love."

When the World War II broke out, she returned to America and recorded various songs for Blue Bird Records, including "Walkin' By The River" and "I See A Million People." During in the early '40s, she became popular on radio; before the decade was out, she had successfully transferred to television.

Her last studio session was for Columbia in New York on May 8, 1950. She retired due to her illness in 1954. Una Mae Carlisle died two years later in November 1956 in New York City.

This spring I am going to try something new: Teach media history with a 10,000-year lens (instead of a couple hundred years).

The other cool thing: Tribal college students in North Dakota are being offered the class online (as well as on campus UND students).

UND COMM 428 MEDIA HISTORY

Native American Media: Petroglyphs to pixels

Origins and evolutions of Native American news media, social media, and related technological innovation. Course will explore the history of Native American communication from petroglyphs to pixels and address its impact of media on society, culture and economics.

The media history in the United States is short, essentially a couple hundred of years. But what if that lens was pulled back and looked at the story from a 10,000-year perspective? We know that people communicated stories using rock art, buffalo hides, and with knotted ropes. Even the idea of social media is different when considering that Po'pay used a viral strategy to coordinate the Pueblo Revolt of 1680. Course will examine first Native American newspapers, radio and TV enterprises, as well as how social media works today.

Course will be taught by Mark Trahant, a nationally known journalist, and faculty member at the University of North Dakota.
