'Seeds of Resistance' protest the Keystone XL Pipeline

Back in 2014, pipeline fighters of all walks of life gathered to plant "Seeds of Resistance" in the path of the Keystone XL pipeline.

Once again this past weekend activists, farmers, tribal leaders and members of the Cowboy-Indian Alliance met up on farmland in Nebraska to plant the Ponca tribe's sacred corn by hand.

Meet the fixer: This storyteller puts people first.

For all their glittering charisma, solar cells and wind turbines don't make for the best story subjects. But the people who benefit from cleantech — whether they're landing jobs in the industry, breathing cleaner air, or just saving a few bucks on utilities — have the real tale to tell.

With 100%, a media campaign from The Solutions Project, Sean Watkins and his team seek out diverse climate leaders across the country and tell their success stories over Facebook, Instagram, and sometimes even physical billboards. The purpose is to build inspiration and momentum for others to push for 100 percent clean energy in their communities and create campaigns that outlive our gone-in-a-minute attention spans.

For the Dakota Access Pipeline protests, Watkins enlisted Avengers star Mark Ruffalo to host eight short videos that profile tribal members and supporters at Standing Rock. Watkins also shines a light on communities that might otherwise fall under the radar. Case in point: a social media and YouTube campaign to recognize PUSH Buffalo, a local group that's turning the shuttered houses and storefronts on the city's West Side into a sustainable neighborhood. (Check

“We know and believe that there are success stories everywhere,” says Watkins.

HENDERSON'S UNION VILLAGE TAKING SHAPE

In what's dubbed the first integrated health care village in the world and largest health care project in the nation at $1.2 billion, Union Village in Henderson is starting to take shape. Little has been discussed publically about the billion-dollar project since Henderson Hospital, the first element of the 155-acre development opened seven months ago. An ambulatory surgery center and doctor's office building adjacent to the hospital remains under construction for tenant improvements for opening this year. <http://erj.reviewjournal.com/ct/uz3688753Biz32846468>

How to Report Live from Nonprofit Conferences and Events

Date: Tuesday, June 13

Time: 1pm EDT (New York)/10am PDT (Vancouver)

Presented by: Heather Mansfield of Nonprofit Tech for Good

Cost: Free

Real-time reporting from nonprofit conferences and events requires an advanced skill set, training, and a lot of practice. Tailored for social media managers, this webinar will highlight which skills are necessary for live reporting, which online tools work the best, and outline a 6-week plan that includes pre-event planning and post-event follow-up. Topics include:

- How to prepare your nonprofit's real-time reporting content strategy in advance of the conference or event.
- Tips for ensuring your live reporting is effective during the conference or event.
- The role of hashtags, Facebook Live, Twitter and Periscope, Instagram, and Snapchat in live reporting.
- Which equipment is necessary for video interviews and live streaming.

- How to repackage and promote live content after the conference or event is over.
