More than awesome:

This awesome periodic table tells you how to actually use all those elements: "Thanks to high school, we've all got a pretty good idea about what's on the periodic table. But whether you're looking at something common like calcium, iron, and carbon, or something more obscure like krypton and antimony, how well do you know their functions? Could you name just one practical application for vanadium or ruthenium? Lucky for us, Keith Enevoldsen from elements.wlonk.com has come up with this awesome periodic table that gives you at least one example for every single element (except for those weird superheavy elements that don't actually exist in nature)...." Read more from Science Alert here: This awesome periodic table tells you how to actually use all those elements

It's not just wild lands that are threatened under President Trump's executive order targeting our national monuments. It's also healthy ocean habitats where some of the world's most imperiled sea life survive.

Among the species at risk in the administration's monument 'review' is the endangered Hawaiian monk seal, one of the rarest mammals in the world, with fewer than 1,400 remaining.

The monk seal's habitat includes Hawaii's Papahānaumokuākea National Monument in the remote northwestern Hawaiian Islands—a prime target in the administration's review—whose protected beaches are vital for tiny seal pups to make it through their first six weeks of life.

Only 4 days remain for the public to speak out against this unprecedented attack on our public lands and waters. Please add your voice now—endangered wildlife need your help.

In an ominous sign of things to come, the Secretary of Interior has already proposed reducing protections for Utah's Bears Ears National Monument.

Along with Papahānaumokuākea, the other 26 public lands and waters under review include the Northeast Canyons and Seamounts Marine National Monument, which is a striking example of healthy ocean waters providing crucial habitat for endangered whales and deep-water corals.

If monument protections are removed, it could open these waters to seismic testing for oil and gas exploration—airgun blasts that are so loud and frequent they disturb, injure or kill marine life, including dolphins and whales.

Please send your message opposing any change to our national monuments. Individualized comments carry more weight in this review—so draw on your passion for wildlife in your message and be as specific as you can. Act now, the comment period ends July 10th.

Thank you so much for speaking out for our wild lands and waters, and the wildlife that depend on them.

With gratitude, Collin O'Mara, President & CEO, National Wildlife Federation Action Fund

Yucca again

By Dennis Myers dennism@newsreview.com This article was published on 07.06.17.
The U.S. House Energy and Commerce Committee voted 49 to 4 on June 28 to transfer some land for the proposed Yucca Mountain dump for high level nuclear wastes in Nye County, and to set a time limit for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to approve the project.

It was the first step in reviving the project after Republicans took House and Senate majorities and won appointment of a U.S. president.

U.S. Reps. Greg Walden of Oregon, Fred Upton of Michigan and John Shimkus of Illinois issued a joint statement saying the dump would be helpful to taxpayers, communities and ratepayers. It would certainly be helpful to their political futures—Upton has three nuclear power plants in his state, Shimkus has another three, and Walden has one. But that's not all. Walden last week wrote an essay for East Oregonian that called for finishing the cleanup of the Hanford site in his state of Oregon that is permeated with radioactive contamination from decades of federal activity and dumping the waste at Yucca. Nevada uses no nuclear energy and has no nuclear power plants.

U.S. Rep. Mark Amodei issued a statement after the vote that never gave his position on Yucca: "I assume no one is surprised this bill started moving. The fact that the vote out of Committee was 49-4, and not a party-line vote, leads me to suspect this is a sign of things to come in the House. Another fact of note—when attempting to predict the future of this legislation—is the fact that Department of Energy Secretary Rick Perry was confirmed in the Senate with a recorded vote of 62-37. We will continue to direct our efforts at providing the best possible protection for Nevadans."

Art of the State Traces of history: The aspens that were once canvasses for Basque shepherds' folk art carvings will eventually die off, but first they're being recorded.
