One Family's Bold Stand to Block Construction of a New Pipeline

Chris Baker Evens, Waging Nonviolence: Two years ago, the most trouble Ellen Gerhart had faced with the law was a parking ticket. Today, standing on a wide swath of cleared forest overlooking miles of mid-construction natural gas pipeline, the 62-year-old retired school teacher and mother of two has three arrests on her record. All for the crime of standing on her own property. Read the Article

Trump Picks DAPL Lobbyist to Oversee EPA Water Safety in Same Week He Rolls Back Water Safeguards

Amy Goodman and Nermeen Shaikh, Democracy Now!: Following an announcement that Trump will try to rescind the Clean Water Rule, The Intercept reports that the person Trump has tapped to be the EPA's water safety official is a former lobbyist with deep ties to a fossil fuel advocacy group that promotes the Dakota Access pipeline and offshore drilling. Nevada Magazine photo needs September/October 2017 issue

Submission Deadline: Wednesday, July 12

Important: In order to be considered for publication, you must include your name, address, phone number, and information about the photo (where it was taken, how it was taken, etc.).**

2017 Great Nevada Picture Hunt - Time is almost up to submit your photography to the 2017 Great Nevada Picture Hunt! The hunt ends July 19. Click here for details: <http://nevadamagazine.com/gnph>

State Park Series Part 4 - We're looking for shots taken at Dayton, Lahontan, Fort Churchill, and Rye Patch State Parks.

Ancient Nevada: Plants & Animals - Do you have any modern shots of plants and/or animals that also existed in ancient Nevada? Examples include pronghorn antelope, Joshua tree, yucca, sagebrush, etc.

Silver State Scavenger Hunt - If you're looking for any excuse to get out and explore Nevada, give our Silver State Scavenger Hunt a shot. The hunt takes you to some of the most intricate and bizarre art in the Silver State, plus offers some great prizes. <http://nevadamagazine.com/home/extras/2017-silver-state-savenger-hunt/>

Scenic Fall Images - Generally, we will consider great seasonal/timely photos for the cover and our Visions department.

Fall Events - Any images that capture the spirit of a popular September/October celebration in Nevada are desired.

Always get permission to photograph on private property. If you just want publication and photo credit (no pay), please notify us when you submit your images.

Editor's Note: If you can, try and get people enjoying Nevada in your photos. Remember, people engaging in activities adds a nice touch.

Visions

Captivating images from your collection could be used in this department. Think seasonal and timely to the issue.

School Board Decisions Spur Onondaga Nation Protest By KATE TAYLOR

A decision not to appoint an Onondaga teacher as principal of the Onondaga Nation School has prompted most parents to keep their children out of class.

Michael Bond, Paddington Bear Creator, Is Dead at 91 By ANITA GATES

The character - disaster-prone but good-natured and always polite - was the hero of children's novels, picture books and animated television series.

Today's encore selection -- from "How Babies Think" by Alison Gopnik. The prefrontal cortex, which is the part of the brain associated with emotional maturity, does not fully develop in humans until they are in their mid-20s. This may be because the prefrontal cortex, though it brings emotional balance, focus, planning and efficient action, restricts a person from the most creative aspects of learning:

"From an evolutionary perspective, one of the most striking things about human beings is our long period of immaturity. We have a much longer childhood than any other species. Why make babies so helpless for so long and thus require adults to put so much work and care into keeping their babies alive?

"Across the animal kingdom, the intelligence and flexibility of adults are correlated with the immaturity of babies. 'Precocial' species such as chickens rely on highly specific innate capacities adapted to one particular environmental niche, and so they mature quickly. 'Altricial' species (those whose offspring need [a longer period of] care and feeding by parents) rely on learning instead. Crows, for instance, can take a new object, such as a piece of wire, and work out how to turn it into a tool, but young crows depend on their parents for much longer than chickens.

"A learning strategy has many advantages, but until learning takes place, you are helpless. Evolution solves this problem with a division of labor between babies and adults. Babies get a protected time to learn about their environment, without having to actually do anything. When they grow up, they can use what they have learned to be better at surviving and reproducing -- and taking care of the next generation. Fundamentally, babies are designed to learn.

"Neuroscientists have started to understand some of the brain mechanisms that allow all this learning to occur. Baby brains are more flexible than adult brains. They have far more connections between neurons, none of them particularly efficient, but over time they prune out unused connections and strengthen useful ones. Baby brains also have a high level of the chemicals that make brains change connections easily.

"The brain region called the prefrontal cortex is distinctive to humans and takes an especially long time to mature. The adult capacities for focus, planning and efficient action that are governed by this brain area depend on the long learning that occurs in childhood. This area's wiring may not be complete until the mid-20s.

"The lack of prefrontal control in young children naturally seems like a huge handicap, but it may actually be tremendously helpful for learning. The prefrontal area inhibits irrelevant thoughts or actions. But being uninhibited may help babies and young children to explore freely. There is a trade-off between the ability to explore creatively and learn flexibly, like a child, and the ability to plan and act effectively, like an adult. The very qualities needed to act efficiently -- such as swift automatic processing and a highly pruned brain network -- may be intrinsically antithetical to the qualities."
