according to officials in San Diego County, California. The project gained a presidential permit last month, but depends on approvals in Mexico and the completion of the Rosarito Beach Desalination Plant in Baja California, which would be the largest in the Western Hemisphere.

A Little Nebraska History (Platte County)

Hanna Larson Archeological Site [25-PT-01] Listed 1975/02/20

Sometime between A.D. 1600 and 1750 ancestors of the Pawnee, probably the Skidi band, built this large village on the terraces and hills above Looking Glass Creek near Monroe.

Feye Archeological Site [25-PT-09] Listed 1974/01/21

The Feye Site, located near Creston, has yielded evidence of a prehistoric occupation attributable to the Late Woodland Tradition (A.D. 500-1000). Unlike many sites of similar age, such as the Wurdeman-Lawson Site, Feye did not yield evidence of houses. The inventory of food refuse differs, and Feye may be an example of an occupation representing a season or function different from other contemporaneous sites.

Wurdeman-Lawson Archeological Site [25-PT-12] Listed 1974/07/12

The Wurdeman-Lawson Site is a prehistoric village of the Late Woodland Tradition (about A.D. 500-1000) situated on a terrace above Loseke Creek near Creston. The dwellings were likely small thatch or hide-covered structures. Excavations retrieved animal bones, charred corn kernels, and material goods. The site is important for the scientific study of the origins of agriculture in northeast Nebraska.

Hill-Rupp Site [25-PT-13] Listed 1985/09/30

Located near the present-day town of Monroe, the Hill-Rupp Site was a late prehistoric Indian village occupied sometime during the period A.D. 1600-1750, probably by the Skidi band of the Pawnee. Excavations have focused on two circular earthlodge ruins, two trash disposal areas, nine storage pits, and one burial. In addition to a rich sample of native-made artifacts, archeologists recovered a small quantity of Euro-American manufactured items.

If you happen to be in Northern Wisconsin for the 4th of July holiday, consider attending the Grand Re-Opening of the Lac du Flambeau Band of Ojibwe's Grand Re-Opening of their historic Indian Bowl. A venue that has a more than 70 year old history, the Lac du Flambeau Ojibwe are inviting any and everyone to attend an event that is sure to be one for the record books.

A grassroots fundraising campaign, it has taken the Tribe more than 10 years to break ground on a cultural asset that will showcase the Tribe's culture, history, and talent for generations to come. For more information on the history of the Indian Bowl Project or to help the Tribe's effort to showcase and preserve its culture and history, please visit www.indianbowlproject.org

The new museum dedicated to Theodor Geisel, better known as Dr. Seuss, in Springfield, Mass., left out some controversial political cartoons.

“Sediment allows coastal habitat to grow, adapt, and maintain itself while sea levels change. It’s almost like it’s the food — the nutrients, minerals, and vitamins — these systems need to grow and adapt, and we are starving them of that.” –Robin Grossinger, a senior scientist with the San Francisco Estuary Institute, commenting on the benefits of the sediment delivered downstream by rivers. While dams around the world keep a massive amount of sediment from reaching coastal areas, a growing movement to remove them could reverse that trend. (Yale Environment 360)

Oakland Votes To Cut Ties With Wall Street!

We did it! Last night, the Oakland City Council unanimously voted to adopt language to require all banks wishing to provide banking services to disclose any investments that support the Dakota Access Pipeline, mass incarceration, or any project that violate indigenous sovereignty.

Together, we sent a message to Wall Street loud and clear that Oakland will no longer be complicit in profiting from the criminalization of people of color and immigrants, violation of indigenous rights, and the exacerbation of climate change.

Our work is far from over. While we celebrate this victory today, we also continue to strategize on the next steps to ensure justice to communities from Standing Rock to the Amazon and future generations who deserve to inherit a thriving climate.

Thank you for standing with us!

How Eating Beans Instead of Beef Will Save You and the Planet By Susan Levin

As the world's second largest greenhouse gas emitter, the United States' withdrawal from the Paris climate agreement drastically curbs international efforts to fight global warming. But concerned Americans don't have to feel powerless. It turns out that simple choices we make every day—or three times a day—have the power to help protect our planet.

For the first time in 13 decades, a wild bison calf was born on Wind River Reservation in Wyoming this spring!

Every step this baby bison takes brings renewed hope for the future of wild bison. But only if friends of wildlife help deliver and restore wild bison to the western landscapes they once roamed.

More than 30 million bison once roamed North America's grasslands. Tragically, they were exterminated en masse until fewer than 100 remained in the wild by the early 1900s.

Over the past two decades, the National Wildlife Federation has partnered with tribal nations to restore herds to tribal lands, where bison were a vital part of the livelihoods and culture for Native Americans. But wild bison need help from YOU to return to their rightful home on the prairies.

Please give by June 30, while your gift has twice the power to rescue bison, restore herds on tribal lands and help vulnerable wildlife.

Thank you for caring about wild bison and making the work of the National Wildlife Federation possible.

Sincerely, Sandra Miao, Director, Membership, National Wildlife Federation
