Mary Gibson Very good interview with two Indigenous women film makers documenting the resistance of Indigenous people who defend their land and water from extraction corporations. Interesting commentary about the relationships between Congressional reps and these corporations, which if you connect the dots, what's happening on Newe Sogobia; the generational trauma and the fracturing of our communities when we're disconnected from the land and for many, live in poverty and feel powerless. Good series. Check it out.

Last year the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) established a rule, Planning 2.0, that provides more opportunities for public input in land management. It also allows for protection of wilderness character to be considered earlier in land management planning. But a resolution in Congress, H. J. Res. 44, would undo this important rule. The resolution has already passed the House and is headed for action in the Senate.

In the past three weeks, more than 11,000 advocates have asked their senators to support public input in land management. Make it 11,001

Water and Climate Dominate World Economic Forum Risk Report

January 13, 2017/in Water Management, Water News, Water Risk /by Brett Walton

Water crises and climate change worry business and political elite.

By Brett Walton, Circle of Blue

Environmental risks, steadily rising in importance, are recognized as authentic and relentless obstacles to peace, wealth, and health, according to the World Economic Forum's global risk report, an annual survey of business, academic, and political leaders.

The report analyzes the strength and likelihood of 30 risks and 13 trends that shape global society. Four of the five environmental risks in the report, all related to climate change and extreme weather, are judged to be large impact and high likelihood threats.

Water crises, deemed a “societal risk” because of their broad reach, ranked third in the high-impact category, the third consecutive year in the top three. Harsh droughts last year in India, South Africa, and Vietnam slashed farm production and cut hydropower generation. Meanwhile, depletion of India's groundwater reserves could squeeze long-term economic growth and flush rural residents into already jammed cities. These and other environmental threats to social well-being “are more prominent than ever,” the report states.

“Over the course of the past decade, a cluster of environment-related risks — notably extreme weather events and failure of climate change mitigation and adaptation as well as water crises — has emerged as a consistently central feature of the risk landscape, strongly interconnected with many other risks, such as conflict and migration,” according to the report.

Environmental threats, the report notes, are occurring in a world being pulled in two: toward greater income inequality and political polarization, both of which have the potential to undermine the collective action required to address water and climate challenges.

The rise of environmental risk is a notable development in the report's 12-year history, says Margareta Drzeniek Hanouz, head of competitiveness and risk at the World Economic Forum. Oil shocks and volatile asset prices, both high-level concerns in the report's early years, have been replaced at the top by water crises and extreme weather.

“Economic risks have been overtaken by the need for action on the environmental side,” Drzeniek Hanouz said.

Richard Samans, managing director of the World Economic Forum, noted several “hopeful signs” of action in the last year from politicians and business leaders. The Paris climate accord, an international commitment to cut carbon emissions, came into effect in November. An amendment to the Montreal protocol, another international agreement, will phase out HFCs, a powerful greenhouse gas used in refrigerants. The aviation industry, for its part, agreed to halt carbon emissions growth after 2020. Financial regulators, meanwhile, discussed guidelines for corporate disclosure of climate risk.

“We’re really finally beginning to move in a serious way,” Samans said, though noting that actions to date are still not enough to prevent the planet from potentially catastrophic warming.

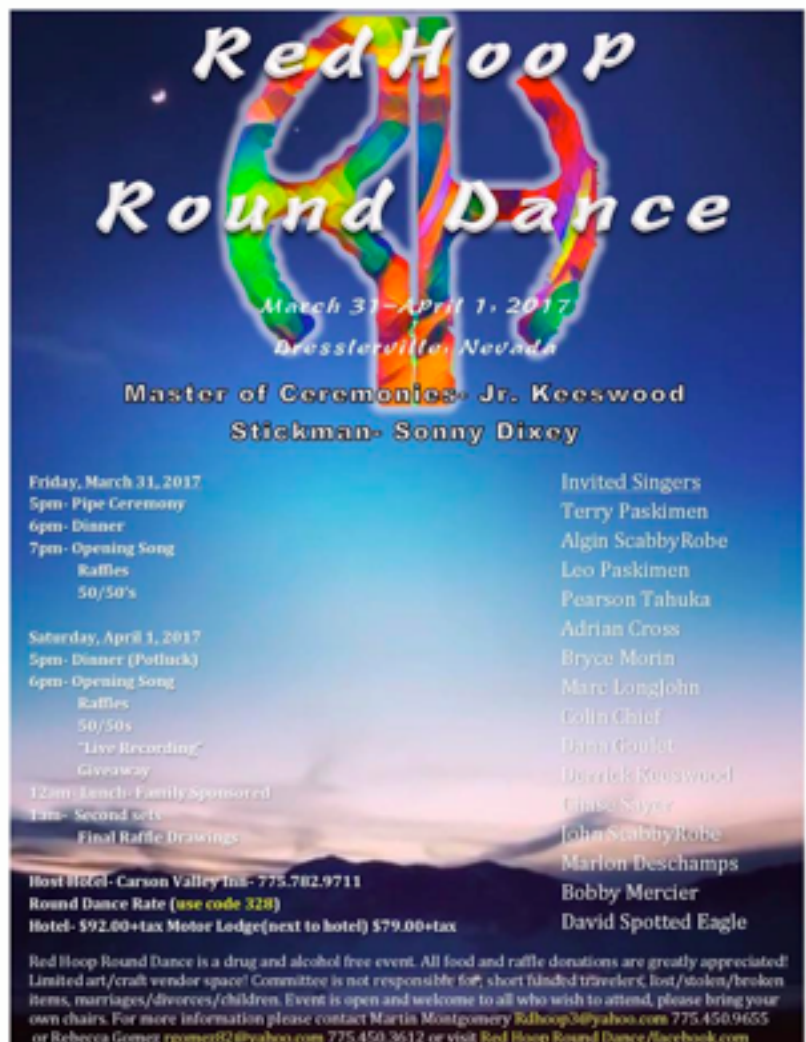

Water and environmental risks can cause cascading social, economic, and political challenges, Drzeniek Hanouz explained. “We see rising migration due to environmental risk, weather-related events, and climate,” she said, citing Internal Displacement Monitoring Centre data that found two-thirds of displacements in 2015 were due to natural disasters.

The risks report represents the collective opinion of 745 members of the World Economic Forum and its affiliates. The report in recent years has targeted a more diverse set of voices. Roughly one in five survey respondents are under the age of 30. Still, nearly half of those polled are from Europe and North America and only 36 percent of respondents who indicated their sex were women.

poor and often very lousy. Besides he is a rank Coward: The little King Bird not bigger than a Sparrow attacks him boldly and drives him out of the District. He is therefore by no means a proper Emblem for the brave and honest Cincinnati of America who have driven all the King birds from our Country....

For the Truth the Turkey is in Comparison a much more respectable Bird, and withal a true original Native of America... He is besides, though a little vain & silly, a Bird of Courage, and would not hesitate to attack a Grenadier of the British Guards who should presume to invade his Farm Yard with a red Coat on.

Soon Stewart Braves have joined the parade of Nevada schools fielding baseball teams. The Indian school is reviving the diamond sport after a lapse of several years. Head coach Walter Johnson has issued equipment to about 15 men and the flychasers are working hard in preparation for a schedule that includes home-and-home games with Reno, Manogue and Lovelock. The starting line-up will include Herman W a d s w o r t h , all-state tackle, doing the receiving behind the plate, with Pancho and Elmer Dick doing the hurling. The infield is made up of Carl Dondero, a colorful performer, at first base. Williams at second, Perry Kochamp at shortstop, and Ed McCloud at third. The starting assignments in the outfield are being held down by Oscar Lucaro in left field, Mose in cente and Malotte in right field. Townsend and Ernie Johnson are hustling reserve outfielders; Cline Tom is a utility infielder and Wallace Garcia will share the catching duties with Wadsworth. McCloud, Williams and Dondero have been clouting the ball for extra bases consistently in practice. Dondero also can be used on the mound if needed, for the flashy first-sacker has shown considerable promise as a hurler in practice.
