Fund for Shared Insight: Listen for Good

The Fund for Shared Insight, administered by Rockefeller Philanthropy Advisors, is a multi-year collaborative effort among funders that pools financial and other resources to make grants to improve philanthropy. Shared Insight emerged from the belief that foundations will be more effective and make an even bigger difference in the world if they are more open. Listen for Good, an initiative of the Fund for Shared Insight, invites nonprofit organizations and funders to join in exploring a systematic and rigorous way of getting feedback from the people who are benefiting from foundation funding. In order to participate in Listen for Good, a nonprofit organization must be nominated by an existing or new funder. Applicants must have a minimum annual budget of $500,000 in the current and previous fiscal years. In 2017, grants totaling $45,000 over two years will be provided to U.S. nonprofit organizations working in any issue area. This amount includes $15,000 from the nonprofit organization's funding partner and $30,000 from the Fund for Shared Insight. The application deadline is May 26, 2017. Visit the Fund for Shared Insight website to learn more about the grant guidelines and application details.

A pipeline in western North Dakota spilled an estimated 756 gallons of oil and 294 gallons of saltwater, a drilling byproduct, into a tributary of the Little Missouri River, the Associated Press reports.

The spill was discovered April 22, approximately 5 miles southwest of the city of Marmarth and was reported that same day, the North Dakota Department of Health announced. The spill originated from a buried three-inch pipeline operated by Oklahoma City-based Continental Resources.

The spill polluted a 14-mile stretch of Little Beaver Creek but did not reach the larger waterway.

"At the time of the release there was a high-enough flow in the Little Missouri that it was actually pushing water back up into Little Beaver Creek, so that prevented any from getting into the Little Missouri," Health Department environmental scientist Bill Suess explained to the AP.

Suess said that the cause of the leak is unknown, with excavation work still underway. More than three-fourths of the discharge has been cleaned up as of Sunday.

He added that the thick consistency of the oil causes it to clump together in the water and form balls that float down the river, making it "pretty easy to collect."

There were no immediate indications of damage to wildlife or livestock, the AP said.

In 2014, the New York Times reported on the industry's increasing number of spills in North Dakota as a result of the area's fracking boom:

"Over all, more than 18.4 million gallons of oils and chemicals spilled, leaked or misted into the air, soil and waters of North Dakota from 2006 through early October 2014. (In addition, the oil industry reported spilling 5.2 million gallons of nontoxic substances, mostly fresh water, which can alter the environment and carry contaminants.)"

Continental Resources, the largest operator in the Bakken shale formation, leads North Dakota in active wells, spills of all kinds, and wastewater or brine spills, InsideEnergy noted from the Times report.

Harold Hamm, founder and CEO of Continental Resources, is an outspoken Donald Trump supporter and discussed with Bloomberg in January his hopes for energy industry regulations rollbacks under the Trump administration and the prospect of U.S. oil independence and increased shale oil drilling.

EcoWatch has covered a number of pipeline spills already this month. The Buffalo Pipeline, owned by Houston-based Plains All American Pipeline, L.P., leaked approximately 450 barrels, or roughly 18,900 gallons, of crude oil onto farmland in Kingfisher County, Oklahoma last week. A busted pipeline spilled crude oil into a Strathcona County creek in Alberta, Canada on Saturday. And in mid-April, Energy Transfer Partners' new Rover Pipeline, which is still under construction, spilled 2 millions of gallon of drilling fluids into two of Ohio's wetlands.

NV Senators Urged to Keep BLM Methane Waste Rule In Place

May 3, 2017 - Suzanne Potter, Public News Service (NV)

Play Audio in Browser Window

Pic: Flaring excess natural gas from oil facilities on federal or tribal land is controversial because it results in lower royalties for taxpayers. (Caitlyn Cromwell)

CARSON CITY, Nev. – Leading voices on national security are asking Nevada U.S. Senators Catherine Cortez Masto and Dean Heller to oppose a plan to repeal an Obama-era rule that forces oil and gas companies to install equipment to minimize the waste of taxpayer-owned natural gas into the atmosphere.

The U.S. House has already voted to scrap the rule, and the Senate is expected to hold its repeal vote very soon. In the meantime, retired Army Major General Paul Eaton and a group of retired generals from the Vet Voice Foundation recently sent a letter to all U.S. Senators, asking them to keep the Bureau of Land Management's Methane Waste Rule.

"We cannot afford to allow oil and gas companies to continue to vent, to flare, to leak methane gas at the expense of taxpayers and our secure and stable energy markets," said Eaton in a tele-town hall.

By some estimates, methane gas worth $300 million a year is simply wasted, denying states and tribes the royalties that would come if the gas were brought to market – funds that Eaton noted could be used on national priorities like education and infrastructure.

In addition, natural gas pollution is linked to asthma and other diseases. But opponents of the BLM rule have argued that it imposes unreasonable costs on industry.

Eaton sees methane waste as a national security risk, as well. He said the U.S. is more likely to need to put troops in harm's way to defend the nation's oil supply, if we fail to take full advantage of domestic sources of natural gas.

"How can we ask our soldiers to put their lives on the line - especially in the energy-producing countries in the Middle East - if every day we allow oil and gas companies at home to waste, by just blowing this stuff into the atmosphere?" he asked.

Sen. Cortez Masto has announced her intention to vote against the repeal and support the rule. Sen. Heller has not taken a position on the issue.
