RCAC seeks a rural development specialist – housing (financial management)

Your financial management skills can make a real difference in rural communities! Provide financial management technical assistance and training support to local organizations working in a variety of housing programs.

Position Description

The financial management specialist trains nonprofit organizations and local and Tribal government agencies to strengthen accounting systems, more effectively manage resources and better understand the cost of services and products. Specific job goals, objectives and tasks are established for each employee as part of the annual evaluation and work plan processes. Duties and responsibilities include but are not limited to:

- Conduct financial management system assessments

- Provide training and technical assistance in specific fields of expertise (e.g., nonprofit and small government accounting, financial management systems, fund accounting, uniform guidance and accounting software packages, etc.)

- Plan, prepare and deliver group and one-on-one adult trainings and workshops at various conferences, institutes, clinics or client agencies

Applicant must live in, or be willing to relocate to, a state HYPERLINK "<http://salsa4.salsalabs.com/dia/track.jsp?v=2&c=%2FZbWP2dzcSv6Pj7MZIFB6P8JMGseHx%2Br>" \t "_blank" within RCAC's service area excluding Alaska and Hawaii, and near an airport. Starting salary monthly range: $4,166.67 to $5,000. For a detailed job description and to access the application, HYPERLINK "<http://salsa4.salsalabs.com/dia/track.jsp?v=2&c=50MbJEP1H3Bx1WnLDIHCPXm8gkJc4yI>" \t "_blank" visit Careers at RCAC.

– Mr. Harrison is a real life hero, but another hero of human existence are horseshoe crabs. “Horseshoe crabs are sometimes called ‘living fossils’ because they have been around in some form for more than 450 million years. In this time, the Earth has gone through multiple major ice ages, a Great Dying, the formation and subsequent breaking up of Pangaea, and an asteroid impact that killed the dinosaurs and most of life on Earth yet again ... modern biomedical industry on this blood that the disappearance of horseshoe crabs would instantly cripple it. And in recent years, horseshoe crabs, particularly in Asia, have come under a number of threats : habitat loss as seawalls replace the beaches where they spawn, pollution, overfishing for use as food and bait. Horseshoe crabs bred for the biomedical use in the United States are returned to the ocean, but an estimated 50,000 also die in the process every year.” (The Atlantic)

As oceans warm, fish and marine life living along U.S. coastlines will permanently move to cooler northern waters, new research predicts. Certain species will only move a few miles, but others, like the Alaskan snow crab, could move up to 900 miles northward. Researchers are unsure how quickly the phenomenon, which is already occurring on a small scale, will take place. NPR

About • The Haunted Museum

Zak Bagans developed a profound interest in the paranormal when he was just 10 years old, scouring nearby garage sales with his mom in search of odd and spooky collectibles.

His fascination with the unusual evolved into a life-long pursuit for answers into the afterlife, not merely the study of earth-bound energy, but years of science-based research using a multitude of specially engineered equipment to measure fluctuations in the environment... more specifically, to communicate with the dead.

Now a pioneer in the paranormal field Bagans is giving everyone a chance to experience the spine-chilling vibe of the spirit world at the new Zak Bagans' The Haunted Museum located in downtown Las Vegas.

The 11,000-square foot property built in 1938 was originally owned by Cyril S. Wengert, a prominent businessman. Through the years, hostile spirits have been rumored to roam the halls terrorizing past occupants, family members who passed away there whose energy remains. Long-time Las Vegas even claim dark rituals took place in the home's basement during the 1970's.

Paranormal enthusiasts visiting Zak Bagans' The Haunted Museum will venture down creepy winding hallways and secret passages into more than 30 rooms that rival scenes from Hollywood horror films, setting the stage for frightening facts about each paranormal piece such as the Dybbuk Box known as the world's most haunted object. The vintage wine cabinet inspired the movie "The Possession" and is said to house a malicious spirit. Shortly following its arrival, mysterious protruding holes began to appear in the walls around the artifact as if something was trying to break out from within the exhibit. A Las Vegas marketing executive and Bagans both witnessed a black-cloaked figure pass through the exhibit's closed door during a private tour. This has also been seen by multiple guests and staff at the museum.

Among the hundreds of terrifying possessions, museum-goers can even peek inside the VW death van in which Dr. Jack Kevorkian ended the suffering of terminally ill patients as well as get a close-up look at the "Propofol chair" from Michael Jackson's death room.

Perhaps most unsettling, the original staircase from Indiana's "Demon House," notorious for powerful paranormal activity before being demolished in 2014. The wooden banister and creaky steps now stand in a dimly-lit corner, resting on a blanket of dirt from the location. Following its installation, a group of construction workers walked off the job and refused to come back. For that reason, visitors are required to sign a waiver stating they understand the risks before entering.

Additionally, children under the age of 16 are not permitted. They can learn all about the haunted collection filmed entirely at the museum in Ghost Adventures – Artifacts on Travel Channel.

Sandoval eyes technology in speech to UNLV law school

By Natalie Bruzda / Las Vegas Review-Journal      May 11, 2018

A changing technological landscape and a vibrant economy await the newest graduates of UNLV's Boyd School of Law.

"This is an exciting time to enter the legal profession," Gov. Brian Sandoval told the graduates during their Friday morning commencement ceremony at UNLV. "I think practicing law is going to be a little different for you than it has been for me."

Sandoval was the keynote speaker for the event, jump-starting his new relationship with the law school as a distinguished fellow in law and policy, which he will be once his tenure as governor ends in January. He last addressed graduates of the law school in 2012., when the state was facing a "different set of circumstances," he said

"A new Nevada has emerged," he said. "Our economy is stronger and more diverse. And we have taken important steps to strengthen education, expand access to health care and advance higher education."

Sandoval said technologies like artificial intelligence, driverless cars, drones, blockchain and the internet of things will influence the day-to-day lives of Nevadans and the way lawyers litigate.

"You're joining the legal profession at a time when there are profound changes happening in our world around us, and I believe those changes will have a seismic effect on our jurisprudence as well," he said, adding that these budding lawyers will play an important role in how case law and precedent evolve during the "fourth Industrial Revolution."

As chairman of the National Governors Association, Sandoval developed an initiative called "Ahead of the Curve," which highlights how governors and states can stay ahead of rapidly advancing technologies.

"You have the opportunity to be the pioneers in this new area of law that's going to emerge — you will shape the legal landscape," he said. "You will introduce new ideas and perspectives and make your marks on the judicial system as it develops in this new age of discovery in ways that the great legal scholars could have never imagined."

Along with this opportunity, Sandoval told the graduates that they have a "special duty" to serve the communities where they live, and find ways to make them better.

He said that for some, becoming a lawyer equates to prestige and privilege, but he cautioned the new graduates that this quest is "fool's good." and is one that never satisfies.

"Success is not a bad thing, but remember, the measure of your success is not about the number of hours you bill, the number of cases you win, the car you drive or the house you buy," he said.

Instead, he told the graduates that they have a unique ability to respond when they see injustice.

“Even with the advent of technology, there are far too many people who will be left behind,” he said. “You are in a position to defend those who cannot defend themselves, to speak on behalf of the vulnerable and the disabled and to fight for causes you believe in even when — and especially when — they’re not popular.”

Brazilian federal courts fight to close a nickel mining plant that is allegedly contaminating the Cateté River.

“The river is dead. If nothing is done, we are on the verge of a chemical ethnocide.” –João Paulo Botelho Vieira Filho, a Brazilian doctor, in reference to heavy metals that have polluted the Cateté River. Soon after a nickel plant began operating in 2010, researchers detected unsafe levels of nickel, iron, chromium, and copper in the river. Federal prosecutors are now fighting to shut down the plant and win $13.7 million in compensation for seven indigenous villages affected by the pollution. *The Guardian*
