Can Humanity Curb its Consumption and Effectively Recycle? :

Time for a brief trip in the Way-Back Machine to when couples had large numbers of children, say, to work on the family farm. People were pretty frugal, so the oldest child’s clothing got passed down to the next in line, and so forth. The clothes were called hand-me-downs, and the methodology was definitely a thing. Modern folk might call it “recycling,” although recycling started centuries ago . Japan began reusing waste paper in the 11th century; in 1690s America, a mill near Philadelphia introduced the process to manufacture paper from recycled cotton and linen rags.

Today’s consumers can simply trash their unwanted items, but after decades of reciting the virtue of recycling, the trend has caught on just about everywhere in America. Generally people feel good about donating, for example, their used clothing to the Salvation Army or Goodwill. What those organizations can’t use is baled and sold by the container-load, mostly to sub-Saharan Africa . Because the second-hand clothing market has become a billion-dollar industry, it can also be pretty political, and some African governments have said that what many in the West think is a generous gesture actually prevents them from developing their own apparel industries.

Thus in March 2016, four East African countries raised tariffs on used clothing, which caused the main US trade group for used clothing to complain to trade officials that tariff increases were hurting their industry. The Trump administration applied pressure on the East African governments , and all except Rwanda scrapped the tariff increase. Unfortunately that government’s efforts to foster its domestic apparel industry have yielded few results, and Rwandans who work in the used clothing business now complain they are suffering.

America used to send the majority of its other exported recycling to China for processing, but in January, China banned the import of various types of plastic, paper, and scrap materials. Afterward, US scrap exports to China fell by about 35% in the first two months of 2018. Sadly, despite decades of American municipalities convincing consumers to recycle their waste, a whole lot of it is winding up in the local landfill anyway . A waste management executive notes: “There is a significant disruption occurring to US recycling programs. The concern is if this is the new normal.

Disposable plastics have created another huge problem in the form of marine pollution. The EU’s 28 member states are being urged to approve an ambitious set of proposals aimed at cleaning up Europe’s beaches and ridding its seas and waterways of ubiquitous plastic litter. According to a 2017 report from Seas at Risk , the EU tosses out 46 billion bottles, 36 billion straws, 16 billion coffee cups, and two billion plastic take-out containers annually. One proposal recommends that, where viable alternatives exist, single-use plastic products be banned from the European market. --Daily Pnut

For those interested in health care:

Today's encore selection -- from Dr. Mütter's Marvels by Cristin O'Keefe Aptowicz.

In the early 1800s, if you wanted to study medicine you went to Paris, where there was a proliferation of hospitals in part because each citizen was entitled to free medical treatment by royal decree. There was even a hospital where you could abandon your child:

"Where else but Paris would there be not one but two hospitals devoted entirely to the treatment of syphilis? Afflicted women were sent to the Hôpital Lourcine, a hospital filled with the most frightful instances of venereal ravages. The men were sent to the Hôpital du Midi, which required that all patients be publicly whipped as punishment for contracting the disease, both before and after treatment.

Le tour d'abandon

"Hôpital des Enfants-Malades was a hospital for ill children, and was nearly always filled to capacity. It had a grim mortality rate -- one in every four children who came for treatment died there -- but the doctors on staff assured visiting scholars that this was because most of the patients came from the lowest classes of society and thus were frequently brought to the hospital already in a hopeless or dying condition.

"Doctors specializing in obstetrics could visit Hôpital de la Maternité. It served laboring women only, and averaged eleven births a day. Some days, however, the numbers rose to twenty-five or thirty women, each wailing in her own bed, as the doctors and midwives (called sages-femmes) rushed among them. New mothers were allowed to stay nine days after giving birth, and the hospital even supplied them with clothing and a small allowance, provided they were willing to take the child with them. Not all of the women were.

"So the Hôpital des Enfants-Trouvés for abandoned children was founded. Newborns arrived daily from Hôpital de la Maternité from women unable or unwilling to keep their children, as well as those infants whose mothers died while giving birth, as one in every fifty women who entered Hôpital de la Maternité did.

Grandnephew.....

"The Hôpital des Enfants-Trouvés also allowed Parisian citizens to come directly to the hospital and hand over a child of any age. The hospital encouraged families to register and mark the children they were leaving so they might reclaim them at a later date, but the families who chose to do so were few. In fact, the vast majority of the children there had arrived via le tour.

"Le tour d'abandon ('the desertion tower') was merely a box attached to the hospital, constructed with two sliding doors and a small, loud bell. An infant was unceremoniously placed in the box, the door firmly closed behind it, and the bell was rung. Upon hearing the bell, the nurses on duty would go to le tour to remove the infant, replace the box to its original position, and wait. Every night, a dozen or so infants were received in precisely this way.

"For a while, it had been in vogue for wealthy, childless individuals to adopt children from the Hôpital des Enfants-Trouvés to bring up as their own, but the practice had long since fallen out of fashion. [In 1831], more than sixteen thousand children were considered wards of the Hôpital des Enfants-Trouvés, and of those, only twelve thousand would live to adulthood.

"There were hospitals for lunatic women and for idiot men, hospitals for the incurable, for the blind, for the deaf and dumb, and even for ailing elderly married couples who wished to die together -- they could stay in the same large room provided that the furniture they used to furnish their room became the property of the hospice upon their deaths.

"And perhaps most astonishing to the visiting American doctors, Paris had the École Pratique d'Anatomie, which provided any doctor, for six dollars, access to his own cadaver for dissection. In America, cadaver dissection was largely illegal. Many doctors resorted to grave robbing to have the opportunity to examine the human body fully. In Paris, twenty doctors at a time would whittle a human body down to its bones -- provided they could stand the smell and the ultimate method of disposal of the dissected corpses: At day's end, the decimated remains were fed to a pack of snarling dogs kept tied up in the back."

Because it is Friday.....

1. Two antennas met on a roof, fell in love and got married. The ceremony wasn't much, but the reception was excellent.
2. A jumper cable walks into a bar. The bartender says, 'I'll serve you, but don't start anything.'
3. Two peanuts walk into a bar, and one was a salted.
4. A dyslexic man walks into a bra.
5. A man walks into a bar with a slab of asphalt under his arm, and says: 'A beer please, and one for the road.'

6. Two cannibals are eating a clown. One says to the other: 'Does this taste funny to you?'
7. 'Doc, I can't stop singing 'The Green, Green Grass of Home.' 'That sounds like Tom Jones Syndrome.' 'Is it common?' Well, 'It's Not Unusual.'
8. Two cows are standing next to each other in a field. Daisy says to Dolly, 'I was artificially inseminated this morning.' 'I don't believe you,' says Dolly. 'It's true; no bull!' exclaims Daisy.
9. An invisible man marries an invisible woman. The kids were nothing to look at either.
10. Deja Moo: The feeling that you've heard this bull before.
11. I went to buy some camouflage trousers the other day, but I couldn't find any.
12. A man woke up in a hospital after a serious accident. He shouted, 'Doctor, doctor, I can't feel my legs!' The doctor replied, 'I know you can't - I've cut off your arms!'
13. I went to a seafood disco last week...and pulled a mussel.
14. What do you call a fish with no eyes? A fsh.
15. Two fish swim into a concrete wall. The one turns to the other and says, 'Dam!'
16. Two Eskimos sitting in a kayak were chilly, so they lit a fire in the craft. Unsurprisingly it sank, proving once again that you can't have your kayak and heat it too.
17. A group of chess enthusiasts checked into a hotel, and were standing in the lobby discussing their recent tournament victories. After about an hour, the manager came out of the office, and asked them to disperse. 'But why,' they asked, as they moved off. 'Because,' he said, 'I can't stand chess-nuts boasting in an open foyer.'
18. A woman has twins, and gives them up for adoption. One of them goes to a family in Egypt , and is named 'Ahmal.' The other goes to a family in Spain ; they name him 'Juan.' Years later, Juan sends a picture of himself to his birth mother. Upon receiving the picture, she tells her husband that she wishes she also had a picture of Ahmal. Her husband responds, 'They're twins! If you've seen Juan, you've seen Ahmal.'
19. Mahatma Gandhi, as you know, walked barefoot most of the time, which produced an impressive set of calluses on his feet. He also ate very little, which made him rather frail and with his odd diet, he suffered from bad breath. This made him. (Oh, man, this is so bad, it's good) ..... A super-calloused fragile mystic hexed by halitosis.
20. And finally, there was the person who sent twenty different puns to his friends, with the hope that at least ten of the puns would make them laugh. No pun in ten did.
