Take your kids, grandkids, nieces and nephews Pinenut picking. Tell them what it is all about...why we pick, how we give thanks, show them how to cook them, and how much work is involved. Harvesting brings families and friends together...it's where you hear the stories/legends, etc. It is our tradition...we had to travel far this year for a taste. I'd like to come out again. ♥📱 Pinenut picking., On another note, saw some commercial pickers with sacks full of pinenuts near Gabbs. Theyre taking from us and turning around and selling to those who don't come out to harvest. Heidi Barlese

Judge Restores Grizzly Bears' Protections As Endangered Species

A federal judge has restored Endangered Species Act protections for grizzly bears living around Yellowstone National Park.

In his ruling, U.S. District Court Judge Dana Christensen said the federal government didn't use the best available science when it removed the bears from the threatened-species list last year.

Monday's ruling puts a stop to proposed grizzly hunts in Wyoming and Idaho, which were on hold while Christensen mulled his decision.

"I'm feeling relieved," Matthew Bishop, an environmental attorney with WildEarth Guardians, said.

He helped represent tribes and conservation groups in a lawsuit filed after the grizzly bears were delisted in 2017. Bishop argued the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service couldn't delist the animals in one isolated spot without considering the impact on threatened grizzly bears living in other places in the Lower 48 states.

"When you commit to recovering a species in the Lower 48 you should do that," Bishop said.

Christensen agreed. In his decision, he said grizzly bears don't roam everywhere in the West like they used to. Instead they live in isolated pockets, and the federal regulators can't delist those isolated pockets until the grizzly populations start connecting together.

"The Service cannot abuse its power to delist an already-protected species by 'balkanization,'" Christensen wrote."

Prior to the ruling, wildlife agencies in Wyoming and Idaho planned to let hunters kill up to 23 grizzlies during its first hunting season for the bears in three decades. It was set to begin on September 1 before Christensen granted a temporary restraining order on August 30.

Many ranchers near the nation's oldest national park lauded the hunt.

"There are people that encounter grizzly bears as part of their daily lives," attorney Cody Wisniewski said at an earlier hearing.

He represented Wyoming ranchers and farmers in the case and said his clients liked having the states in charge.

"Their goal is just to have local management. To be able to go to their local representatives, their elected officials, the people that live in and beside them in their state in order to resolve any disputes," he said.

According to Montana Public Radio, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service spokesperson Jennifer Strickland said the federal government will "work with the state and tribes to ensure that this transition proceeds in accordance with the court's order."

Bishop of WildEarth Guardians noted the federal government could appeal the decision, which could also impact the proposed delisting of grizzly bears living in the Northern Continental Divide Ecosystem near Montana's Glacier National Park. <http://www.whitewolfpack.com/>

Actor Sean Penn Helps Lumbee Tribe in Aftermath of Hurricane Florence

Sean Penn, the winner of two Oscars, stopped by the Lumbee Tribe of North Carolina, on Sunday to assist in the relief efforts in a region that has been hit hard from flooding, power outages in the aftermath of Hurricane Florence that hit both Carolinas hard over a week ago.

The Lumbee Tribe of North Carolina has collaborated with Chef Jose Andres' organization World Central Kitchen, and Sean Penn's organization J/P HRO to see to the needs of this community in the aftermath of Hurricane Florence. Chef Jose Andres and his staff along with J/P HRO have continued to deliver meals to our site for distribution and have assisted with our disaster relief efforts.

On Sunday, Sean Penn and Chef Jose Andres met with Chairman Harvey Godwin, Jr. and Tribal Staff to discuss the ongoing relief efforts and the needs of our community going forward.

Penn was able to be observe and visit with tribal staff and volunteers, as they worked to get supplies and meals distributed to our community members. During his visit Sean Penn and J/P HRO wanted to ensure the focus was and remained on the relief efforts. Mr. Penn was extremely humble and sincere in his desire to help our community and the Lumbee Tribe is grateful for his concern and generosity.

Chef Jose Andres' organization, World Central Kitchen uses the expertise of its Chef Network to empower people to be part of the solution, with a focus on health, education, jobs and social enterprise.

Sean Penn's organization, J/P HRO has four core programs: Community Health, Community Development, Engineering and Construction, and Reforestation. J/P HRO's mission is to save lives and build sustainable programs quickly and effectively with those impacted by disasters.

The Lumbee Tribe says due to the partnerships with these two organizations, the Tribe has been able to provide food and needed supplies throughout our tribal community in the storm's aftermath and expresses its gratitude.
