Libraries in LA are starting to let kids read to pay off their late fees. Each hour they spend reading knocks off $5 from their balance. The idea has exploded, having 100 kids a week reading away their debt and over 3,500 accounts cleared during the first six months of the program.

Algerian Youth Leadership Program Applications Open

First, if you have children, grandchildren or friends with high school age kids, please review the application for US high school students to participate in this summer's Algerian Youth Leadership Program.

The application deadline is January 27 and application materials can be found at here. We are looking for 10 highly motivated students (between the age of 15-17) who are interested in learning about other cultures, have a keen sense of leadership and are willing to spend a month learning about the world. Activities include daily workshops at the University's School of Journalism, a week at Sierra Nevada Journey and a trip to Washington D.C.

January 9, 2016

We offered prayer at The Last Hole along Antelope Creek tonight. This site got its name because, after days of running, 21 Cheyenne (mostly kids) hid here. US soldiers approached from three directions and there was nowhere for them to run so they piled on one another, placing the youngest children closest to the ground in attempts to protect them. The soldiers could've approached, recaptured them, and taken them back to the fort but they didn't. All of those who hid here were summarily executed, shot at point-blank range. There were kids as young as 8, 5 and 2yrs old.

Dirt was carelessly thrown over their bodies. Days later they were dug up and eventually taken to the Smithsonian in Washington DC so their remains could be studied to see how well the Army's guns worked on bones and skulls at close range.

After the Native American Graves and Repatriation Act was passed in 1990, Cheyenne leadership fought to bring them home. They returned in 1993. Our Run ends at their gravesite in Busby, MT. The rancher who now owns this land, Andy Federle, reported hearing children's screams and cries across this land at night. Years and years ago, Phillip Whiteman Jr and Lee Lonebear visited the rancher and asked to visit the site to offer prayer.

This working relationship allows for the Runners to visit The Last Hole every year to offer prayers to those spirits. Now, Mr. Federle reports hearing sounds of play and laughter.

Our prayers are strong. They bring healing, for both spirits in this world and the other world. This Run is an act of resilience and hope.

Cinnamon Spear I'm so happy this post from two years ago is still circulating and educating. That's the power of writing. This post and all of you and your shares are helping to build the energy of the Run two years later while I primarily stay off social media this year in efforts to be present with the youth. Thank you all!

William Walksalong In September 1992, shortly after Cowboy Fisher and I were sworn as President and Vice-President he asked me to sort the piles of documents on a conference table the outgoing President used. The very first document was a 3rd letter of notification from a Smithsonian official inquiring if the N. Cheyenne Tribe was interested in repatriating our people's remains. I was literally stunned that my predecessors did not pay attention to spirits of our old ones who wanted to return to the north country. I called the contact person the same morning. I told Cowboy our people were calling us to intercede and help them complete their difficult trail home. About 2 weeks later we received formal notice from Yale University's Peabody Museum asking if our tribe was interested in repatriating an additional 6 human remains identified as N. Cheyenne taken in possession near Fort Robinson, NE. Cowboy told me our people did not to be left in a storage facility. We agreed to do our best to bring our loved ones back to our homeland, a place they sacrificed their lives for. My respectful for their act of love is very difficult to express. It is beyond human comprehension. They have blessed us and we are living evidence of Maheo's answer to prayers. Thank you runners and organizers. ly

Jeanette Allen is feeling concerned.

Well this day and age....so much for oral history...I asked my granddaughter about an old saying....she denied hearing about it...I told her to text her brother...he said he didn't know...so I asked her to text her dad...he had to tell her. He grew up hearing his grandparents telling stories without the interruption of cell phones and games but listening, playing out doors, roaming the irrigation ditches, riding horses etc. My grandson finally said oh yea I "kinda" remember hoobe'e saying that.

Lakriissa Allen We dont hear those kind of stories no more kuz even our grandparents are stuck on fb and cell phones tablets n tv lo

I just had the privilege of visiting with lifelong buckaroo, Clyde Brown to learn about his life. What a remarkable journey he has been on with a history of working on many of the most historic buckaroo outfits of the Great Basin. That said, I asked Clyde if it would be OK to mention that he is now seriously ill with Valley Fever which keeps him close to home with his parents in McDermitt and the dialysis machine in Winnemucca. He misses the buckaroo life terribly. Visits from friends and family mean a lot to him as winters with this illness are the hardest! Thank you Clyde, for helping me gather up this info!

A lifelong buckaroo, Clyde Dean Brown, 48, grew up on the Paiute/Shoshone Reservation, at McDermitt, Nevada. He grew up helping his uncle, Craig Garfield, with his cattle and horses and working at various ranches around McDermitt. After high school, he worked as a buckaroo for Martin Andre, Arock, Oregon, near Jordan Valley, then he moved to Paradise Valley, Nevada, to help Charley Amos on his ranch. After that, he moved to Twin Falls, Idaho to work for several years for the Twin Falls Livestock Commission. Then he moved to Owyhee, Nevada where he buckarooed for various ranches around Duck Valley before he went to work at the YP for seven years when Nathan Kelly was the buckaroo boss. There, during slow times, he'd also do ranch hand work like haying. He worked for the IL Ranch for a little bit for Gordon Wines.

After a brief return to McDermitt, he went to Nebraska for a little bit. Upon returning from Nebraska, he worked for the Ten-Mile Ranch owned by Terry and Dan Wegner at McDermitt. Clyde says, "They were good guys to work for...they had a big feedlot by the Hotsprings where I helped take care of yearlings. I had fun working when the cattle were sold by video." He then worked for the historic Whitehorse Ranch for Brit Laye. "Skeeter Clark was there are that time....I enjoyed working for Skeeter ...he was a good guy," he said. Then he went to

Bishop, California where he day worked for Jim Cashbaugh on his ranch just outside of town. On weekends he would visit James Shoshone who was then living in Fallon, Nevada. They'd team up to ride around and day work for area ranches. After this, he went to Bakersfield, CA and worked in the oil fields where he ended up catching valley fever. "It really messed me up. I currently can't work because I have pneumonia and I'm in dialysis treatment," he says. "I can still ride a horse and help with brandings but I need to ride a nice bridle horse and no colts until I get well again. I wish I could...I am really weak...I'd probably get dumped and drug...I really enjoy the buckaroo life and miss it!"

Federal Courts, Running Out of Money, Brace for Shutdown's Pain

By THOMAS KAPLAN

The judicial branch has been able to continue paying its workers so far, but that may soon change if the partial government shutdown continues.

“We have spent $13bn on the Murray-Darling Basin plan, yet the river system is in collapse. This plan was put in place to fix the river, and cotton, corruption and climate change is killing it.” – Sarah Hanson-Young, the environment and water spokeswoman for Australia’s Green party, in response to recent fish kills along the river system. Next month, the Greens plan to introduce legislation calling for a royal commission into the mismanagement of the Basin. The Northern Basin Aboriginal Nations have expressed support for the investigation, but the legislation will likely receive a mixed response from Australia’s other political parties. With authorization from the National Park Service, we will hike through the badlands to see Ice Age deposits and fossils, the Eglington Fault, and a rare Late Pleistocene tufa channel. This easy hike will be about four miles, with less than 100 feet of elevation change. Click here to RSVP.

William Barr and the Crucial Role of the Justice Department

Jeffrey Toobin, The New Yorker

Toobin writes: "Based on the hearing, one might think that supervision of the special counsel is the Attorney General's main responsibility. But that's far from true, and it's regarding the other work of the Justice Department, particularly its central mission of protecting the civil rights of all Americans, that the prospect of Barr's service appears daunting."
