Finally... NativeAmerican Veteran Memorial Set To Open in 2020

Posted By Corinne Oestreich

Native Veterans are set to receive a memorial park in 2020 in Washington DC.

“The Washington Post reported Thursday that design details for the structure titled “Warriors’ Circle of Honor” are still being finalized, though the memorial has been in the works for years. In 1994, Congress passed legislation mandating the memorial be built at the Smithsonian's National Museum of the American Indian, which opened 10 years later. But the legislation didn't allow the museum to raise money for it. In 2013, new legislation allowed fundraising.

US Policy: Mass Murder of Migratory Birds Not Our Problem

William Boardman, Reader Supported News

Boardman writes: "One of the ways American fascism works these days is to ignore the rule of law while putting on a great fake show of legal probity. The example here is the Trump administration's secret reversal of migratory bird protection law." READ MORE

Scientists think a new fault line might turn Nevada into a coast

Move aside, San Andreas. A new fault is shaking up the tech industry's latest frontier in the West —and only a small group of scientists is paying attention. On a recent trip to Nevada's Pyramid Lake, geologist James Faulds explores what he believes may become the future continental edge of North America. U.S. ROUTE 395 is a geologic master class disguised as a road. It runs north from the arid outskirts of Los Angeles, carrying travelers up to Reno along the eastern flank of the Sierra Nevada.

Native Peoples' Bones Are Not Collectors' Items. They Must Be Returned.

MARY ANNETTE PEMBER, TRUTHOUT

Recent FBI attempts to reach out to Native Americans for help in repatriating approximately 500 sets of human remains found in a private collection are yet another reminder of the cultural hegemony of European conquest and entitlement over Indigenous peoples. That the collector, Don Miller, was not charged for the crime is further proof of the entrenched racism that views the robbing of Native graves as a "harmless hobby." Read the Article →

The world of birds is full of remarkable evolutionary feats but this surprising bird behavior is both practical and relatable. I mean, what parent hasn't wished for an extra pair of hands—or talons—around the nest?

Like many raptor species, Bald Eagles can mate for life, and when their mate dies, they don't hesitate to seek out a new one. Which is why the story of two males and a new female documented by a wildlife refuge webcam has left observers scratching their heads. Whatever their reasons, this trio has charmed viewers and, so far, raised several very healthy, thriving eaglets.

Read the full story of this special nest and learn about other avian examples of “nest helpers.”
