Get Free 2 Day Logging With Amazon Tribe

- An indigenous media group is hoping to raise awareness of the threat posed in the Amazon rainforest by illegal loggers, miners and drug traffickers.
- The group released a video of an uncontacted tribesman believed to belong to the Awá people. The video was recorded by a member of a neighboring tribe, the Guajajara, which is trying to defend one of the last pockets of intact forest in Maranhao, a massively deforested state in northeast Brazil.
- Commercial interests that want to move into the land have questioned the existence of these tribes, but the new footage has been cited as proof that they remain in the territory. The Awá have been described as the world’s most threatened tribe by the NGO Survival International, which has tracked killings by loggers who surround and frequently encroach upon the group’s territory.
