The ‘best job in America’ pays over $108,000 a year — and has a high number of openings By Quentin Fottrell, Personal Finance Editor

This analysis is based on median salary, overall job satisfaction and the number of job openings

Data scientists and software developers receive more than $100,000 a year on average and are each ranked No. 1 by two separate reports.

Most people want to find a job that gives them more money, but they also want to be happy.

It’s the $108,000 question: How can you have both? Is there a job out there that gives you a six-figure income, high job satisfaction and has enough job openings to make it a real possibility? As unemployment hovers at a 49-year low, it’s a question worth asking.

There’s probably never been a better time since the Great Recession to start looking. The U.S. economy is slowing down and added 130,000 new jobs in August, the government reported.

Is there a job out there that gives you a six-figure income, high job satisfaction and has enough job openings to make it a real possibility?

Companies are always keen to use intel to improve efficiency and learn more about their customers and, so, data scientists are in high demand.

They’re No. 1 on Glassdoor’s “50 Best Jobs in America” for 2019 — for the fourth straight year. They boast a median base annual salary of $108,000, but Glassdoor also says there are signs their salary growth has been levelling off. They were followed by nursing managers at No. 2 ($83,000) and marketing managers at No. 3 ($82,000), occupational therapists at No. 4 ($74,000) and product managers at No. 5 ($115,000).

The “Glassdoor Job Score” is determined by weighing three factors equally: Earning potential (median annual base salary), overall job satisfaction rating and number of job openings. For a job title to be considered, it must receive at least 100 salary reports and at least 100 job satisfaction ratings shared by U.S.-based employees in one year. Results represent job titles that rate highly among all of those three categories. C-suite and intern level jobs were excluded from this report.

There were other six-figure jobs among Glassdoor’s top 20 list with a relatively high number of openings, job satisfaction and earning potential, including devops engineers at No. 6 ($106,000 a year) who work with developers and the IT staff to oversee code releases, data engineers at No. 8 ($100,000), software engineers at No. 10 ($104,000), physician assistant at No. 12 ($105,000), strategy manager at No. 16 ($140,000) and security engineers at No. 17 ($102,000).

But data scientists have competition. A separate report by the U.S. News & World Report on the best jobs of the year lists software developers as No. 1. The position offers flexible hours and remote work opportunities, while investing in individuals’ personal and professional development. Like data scientists, software developers have a median annual salary of over $100,000. They're employed in computer systems design, manufacturing and finance. Physician assistants were No. 2, followed by dentists at No. 3.

The 'Glassdoor Job Score' is determined by weighing three factors equally: Earning potential (median annual base salary), overall job satisfaction rating and number of job openings.

Data scientists and software developers use programming language such as Python, followed by R, SQL, Hadoop and the more well-known Java, according to careers site Glassdoor. A mid-level data scientist is likely to be proficient in Python, R and SQL, and make close to $130,000 a year. Google GOOG, -0.04%, Aetna US:AET, and Microsoft MSFT, -1.14% typically hire people for these roles.

The jobs environment is getting rosier, at least judging by the latest jobs figures from the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The unemployment rate was unchanged at 3.7% in August and remained near a 50-year low. What's more, more people entered the labor force in search of work, the government reported. The labor force participation rate was 63.2% in August, up slightly from 63% in July.

‘Blob’ of warm Pacific water is back — could be trouble for marine life and weather By San Francisco Chronicle, 9/10/19

An ominous warm patch similar to the notorious “blob ” that wreaked havoc along the California coast five years ago has been detected along the West Coast, raising fears among scientists that the fragile ocean ecosystem may be facing another calamity. A large marine heat wave has warmed the northern Pacific Ocean and is threatening to disrupt sea life from Alaska to Southern California, marine biologists with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said. The mass of unusually warm water, known officially as the Northeast Pacific Marine Heatwave of 2019, is the second largest in 40 years.
