Sarah E. Cowie, Ph. D., Associate Professor of Anthropology, University of Nevada, Reno:
"Community Engagement and Collaborative Archaeology at Stewart Indian School"

The Stewart Indian School in Carson City, Nevada, established in 1890 as a federally mandated residential school, attempted to remove Native children from approximately 200 tribal communities and assimilate them into mainstream society. A collaborative archaeology project at the school connects two seemingly disparate aspects of removal. First, archaeology, historical documents and oral histories illuminate the ramifications of children's forced removal from their families and traditional homelands for mandatory school attendance in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, with repercussions lasting into present day. Second, several tribal members who participated in the archaeology project brought to light the far-reaching consequences of removing artifacts from the site, a practice that threatens to erase both their ancestors and their descendants from the landscape. Engaging young people and elders from several tribes enriched the interpretations and preservation efforts at this site, and demonstrated the knowledge and resilience of communities whose voices should be influential in archaeological research.

Sarah Cowie specializes in historical-period archaeology of the American West. She recently completed the book "Collaborative Archaeology at Stewart Indian School." She earned her B.A. in Archaeology from Mount Holyoke College, her M.S. in Industrial Archaeology from Michigan Technological University, and her Ph.D. in Anthropology from University of Arizona. Prior to teaching, she worked in cultural resource management for several years throughout the United States.

Wisconsin Lawmakers Seek to Criminalize Environmental Protests

DAVID ARMIK, CENTER FOR MEDIA AND DEMOCRACY

Expanding on a current law passed in 2015, lawmakers in Wisconsin have introduced a bill designed to quash protests around fossil fuel infrastructure. The legislation echoes similar bills pushed in nine states by the American Legislative Exchange Council and the Council of State Governments over the last two years. Read the Article →

Sign The Trust for Public Land's petition now and tell your representatives: Bears Ears National Monument is not for sale!

SIGN NOW

When the Trump Administration cut Bears Ears National Monument by 85% in 2017, it put more than a million acres of irreplaceable historical, archeological, and cultural sites at risk of looting and destruction. Now, they've released their plans to open up what's left of Bears Ears National Monument to drilling and mining — ignoring the will of the majority of Americans to protect this undeveloped and precious landscape.

This plan is unacceptable. Don't let the Trump Administration hand over the remaining portion of Bears Ears to private corporations to pillage. Sign the petition today >>

Bears Ears National Monument was originally designated to protect 1.35 million acres of lands rich with cultural heritage, flora and fauna, and recreational opportunity. Allowing any part of these lands — from the ancient cliff dwellings to the scenic buttes to the juniper forests — to fall into the wrong hands will do irreversible damage to Utah's iconic landscape. Yet, over 300 mining claims have already been filed within the original boundaries of the monument.

We cannot allow the Trump Administration to sell off Bears Ears National Monument to the highest bidder. That's why The Trust for Public Land is working to build support in Congress for the Bears Ears Expansion and Respect for Sovereignty Act (H.R. 871). This Act will bar the administration from placing these public lands in the hands of corporations, expand the monument to 1.9 million acres, and restore protections for over 100,000 archeological and cultural sites currently at risk.

This bill must be passed to protect Bears Ears National Monument. Add your name and send a message to your representatives to keep corporate hands off our public lands!

Thank you for keeping up the fight to protect our national monument landscapes during this critical time. The Trust for Public Land

Scenic America

Last night the White House announced that President Trump signed into law the "Reviving America's Scenic Byways Act of 2019."

This is a great victory for all of us! Together we made phone calls and sent emails to our Members of Congress and that work paid off. Congratulations, and thank you for making Scenic America who we are today.

The law requires the Secretary of Transportation to start the application process for new byways within 90 days and designate a round of new National Scenic Byways within one year. We'll keep you updated as this process unfolds.

Click here to read Scenic America's full statement, along with those of allied organizations, on the signing of the legislation.

To better understand how this new law will benefit communities along scenic byways everywhere, please read our editorial published in The Hill last week.

We would again like to thank Rep. David Cicilline (D-RI) and Rep. Garret Graves (R-LA) for their leadership in the House, and Sen. Susan Collins (R-ME) and Sen. Ben Cardin (D-MD) for their leadership in the Senate.

Here's to many more scenic victories ahead! Mark Falzone, President

Water harvester makes it easy to quench your thirst in the desert

Rare California trout returns to native habitat By Antelope Valley Press, 9/19/19 LOS ANGELES (AP) — For the first time in nearly a century, a rare California trout species will swim in a mountain creek that is its native habitat, marking a major milestone that conservationists hope will lead to a thriving population and removal of its threatened status. About 30 Paiute cutthroat trout will be plucked Wednesday from Coyote Valley Creek in the eastern Sierra Nevada wilderness and hauled in cans strapped to pack mules about two miles west into Long Valley. State and federal researchers will be on hand as the fish are dumped into a stretch of Silver King Creek at around 8,000 feet elevation, where the shimmering species glided through the cold water for thousands of years below a waterfall before they started disappearing in the 1920s.

James Cameron: Our So-Called Civilization Is Using the Ocean as Its Toilet

September 20, 2019 James Cameron, creator of the films Avatar and Titanic, is speaking out about the "horrific" presence of plastic waste throughout the oceans—right down to Earth's deepest spot, the Challenger Deep—and arguing that research attempts to combat the problem are "shamefully underfunded." "Our so-called civilization is using the ocean as its toilet," he told Newsweek. "Unless this changes, and fast, ocean ecosystems are going to continue their rapid collapse." In 2012, Cameron

Horse Rich & Dirt Poor:
The challenge to healthy Nevada lands, wildlife and wild horses

- Educational screening of Horse Rich & Dirt Poor
- Panel discussion by Nevada lands, wildlife and wild horse experts
- Submit workable management solution to achieve healthy Nevada lands, wildlife and wild horses

Wednesday, October 23 • 5:30–8:00 pm

Nevada Museum of Art • The Sky Room
160 West Liberty Street, Reno

include a screening of Horse Rich & Dirt Poor, followed by a panel discussion between experts on Nevada lands, wildlife and wild horses. There will be opportunity for you to submit questions and workable solutions.

This forum will provide a setting to learn and understand the wild horse/burros management issues of short and long term impacts to our habitats, water, wildlife and other natural and financial resources. Together we can consider various options with a goal to successfully move forward workable solutions to our Congressional delegation.
