Nevada tribes slam state for scrubbing native history document from web
The document describes why stand of trees in northeastern Nevada is sacred. The trees are at center of dispute over water pipeline to Las Vegas

And may I repeat: Nevada has had no state archivist for two years, so many little things have happened or not happened. In addition (repeating again), with the closing of NARA Seattle, a group of Nevada records, primarily those of Mc D and DVPST may be "lost" for awhile.

From the Daily Kos:

President Biden has nominated Deb Haaland for Secretary of the Interior. She will become the first Native American to lead the department.

And yet, this nomination has of course been mired by petty GOP foot-stomping -- Congressional Republicans are preparing to stall this historic Cabinet nomination because they are threatened by her track record of unapologetic support for Indigenous communities, and know she endangers their push for drilling, mining, and further exacerbating the climate disaster to line their pockets with dirty money.

This is truly a disgusting attempt to stall HISTORY in the making in order to increase access to, and abuse our national public resources.

Hidden in Plain Sight: History Teaching Needs to Take Advantage of Art and Material Culture by Elizabeth Stice

"Where there is passion, people will pursue the past. A sneakerhead can tell you about the innovations in Air Jordans over the years and oftentimes quite a bit about the economic and cultural context of each shoe. Art and material culture can lead people to their own study of the past."

6% of Earth's Protected Land Is Used to Grow Crops, Study Finds

Morgan Erickson-Davis, Mongabay

Erickson-Davis writes: "Covering around 13% of Earth's surface and harboring an estimated 83% of its endangered wildlife, protected areas are tasked with an outsize responsibility to safeguard vulnerable species, as well as many Indigenous communities. But mounting evidence suggests protected areas may not be living up to their name." READ MORE
