Multi-Colored Plumage And Unique Shape, The Mandarin Duck Is Rocking The World Of Bird

If "boots are made for walking", what are these made for?!

In 2007, the First Nations Child and Family Caring Society, a child welfare advocacy group, and the Assembly of First Nations, Canada's largest Indigenous organization, brought a case to the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal alleging that First Nations children were being discriminated against in the child welfare system. Specifically, the government didn't fund their child welfare and family support services at the same level that they did for non-Indigenous families.

The Canadian government announced on Tuesday that it has agreed to pay $31.5 billion ($40 billion in Canadian dollars) to compensate Indigenous families harmed by the nation's child welfare system, and to work to address the issues with the system. It's the largest settlement in Canadian history. Experts estimate 115,000 children have been separated from their families since 1991, and half of the sum will go to compensating those affected. The other half will be spread out over five years to help keep First Nations families together.

Cindy Woodhouse, the Manitoba regional chief at the Assembly of First Nations, said, "First Nations from across Canada have had to work very hard for this day to provide redress for monumental wrongs against First Nation children, wrongs fueled by an inherently biased system...This wasn't and isn't about parenting. It's in fact about poverty." For reference, less than 8% of children under 14 in Canada are Indigenous, but over 52% of those in foster care are Indigenous. The system was set up in favor of removing children from the home over putting supports into place to help them stay in the home.

The Canadian Human Rights Tribunal had ruled back in 2016 that the government needed to reform its child welfare system for First Nations children, including changing the formula used to determine how funds are allocated for government services on reserves. The government repeatedly stalled, trying to have the case dismissed, and in the five years since, the tribunal has issued about 20 non-compliance orders. According to Cindy Blackstock, the executive director of the organization that initiated the case, if Canada had reacted promptly, they "could have settled this case for hundreds of millions of dollars back in 2000."

Tuesday's settlement is the second massive compensation agreement with Indigenous communities to be announced by Canada's federal government recently. Last month, a $6.3 billion lawsuit against the government over years of contaminated drinking water on Indigenous reserves was announced. Canada has been reckoning with their legacy of mistreatment of Indigenous communities in recent years, and while this latest move to rectify the situation for the child welfare system is a step in the right direction, it cannot undo the decades of harm for thousands of children. When you think of America's congressionally designated wilderness areas, what comes to mind?

Intact ecosystems teeming with native wildlife and wild places, where people can find solace and solitude in an increasingly fast-paced world? Or aerial gunning, poisoning, and trapping of native wildlife?

The answer should be clear. But unfortunately, the federal wildlife-killing program known as Wildlife Services uses our tax dollars to deploy neck snares, foothold traps, "cyanide bombs," and sharpshooters in helicopters to kill hundreds of thousands of native animals on public lands—even in protected wilderness areas.

We have waged a relentless battle to end this war on wildlife. Over the last five years, litigation against the USDA Wildlife Services by WildEarth Guardians and our allies has resulted in legal victories in Idaho, Wyoming, California, Nevada, Oregon, Montana, and Washington—each of them curbing the program's slaughter of native wildlife and increasing its accountability to the public.

But we aren't resting until we end this rogue program's war on wildlife once and for all.

Earlier this month, Guardians launched a lawsuit challenging Wildlife Services' expansion of aerial gunning, poisoning, trapping, and shooting of bobcats, foxes, coyotes, mountain lions, beavers, and other wildlife on public lands across Nevada, including the potential for killing wildlife on over six million acres of wilderness and wilderness study areas.

With your help and your support, we will have the financial resources we need in 2022 and beyond to defend vulnerable wildlife and ensure that public lands are a refuge for native animals. Can I count on your donation today? As an added bonus, your donation will be matched by another generous supporter.

While society has evolved to understand the importance of native species as a key part of ecosystems and the need for coexistence with wildlife, Wildlife Services continues to rely on antiquated practices from a bygone era when many animals were pushed to the brink of extinction. We demand better from the federal government.

Public lands across the American West are critical for preserving biodiversity and enabling native ecosystems to thrive—they are meant to be wildlife havens, not slaughtering grounds. We must not let the federal government use our tax dollars to slaughter the very creatures that epitomize the wildness of these landscapes.

For the Wild,

Veterans Alert!

This program is open to any military veteran to take a free training course with their personal dog, no matter the age, ability, or training level. The course is 9 weeks long, and if the veteran attends enough classes to graduate, they can test for the Canine Good Citizen Award for free at the last class. This is a nice certification to have, especially if the dog is active with its owner in the community.

The Nevada Department of Veterans Services is excited to partner with the Truckee Meadows Dog Training Club for another session of the Veterans K-9 Corps. This is a 9-week training program that covers many different aspects of training for veterans with dogs of all ages and obedience levels. Please see attached flyer for more information (first attachment).

The next course will begin next week on Tuesday, January 11th at 7pm and will run every Tuesday evening until March 8th. Trainings will take place at the Training Center located at 1901 Silverada Blvd Unit 6, Reno, NV 89512.

Interested veterans may complete the attached application (second PDF) and send it back to Rachel Jelenic at jelenicr@veterans.nv.gov along with the most up to date record of their dog's vaccines.

May you fall madly in love this year .. in love with someone who unhinges your tired trajectory, in love with a spouse of several years who might be aching for lightning, in love with demanding children and crazy relatives .. in love with the particular pedigree of genius insanity that has perhaps claimed you in spite of your reluctance .. and certainly in love with an animal, a cloud, a redwood, the wild .. these at least once a day. May you fall in love with this fragile jewel of a world, with hard work, real learning, just causes, petitioning and prayers. May you fall in love with wonder itself, with the grand mystery, with all that feeds you in order that you may live .. and with the responsibility that that confers. May you fall in love with heartbreak and seeing how it's stitched into everything. May you fall in love with the natural order of things and with tears, tenderness and humility. May this be a magnificent year for you. May you fall deeply, madly, hopelessly, inextinguishably in love.
