Biden to commit to protecting hundreds of thousands of acres in Nevada from development, honoring tribes

President Biden will announce Wednesday that he supports a push by the Fort Mojave and 11 other tribes, along with environmentalists and local residents, to protect a broad swath of land in southern Nevada, according to a senior administration official who spoke on the condition of anonymity because the announcement was not yet public. The coalition has been pushing to expand protections around Avi Kwa Ame, or Spirit Mountain. But some developers warn it could hamper the state's renewable energy industry.

Native Americans and the White House

Native Americans hold a significant place in White House history. For thousands of years, Indigenous peoples, including the Nacotchtank and Piscataway, lived in the Potomac Valley prior to the construction of the White House. Since that time, Native Americans have come to the Executive Mansion to share their cultural heritage, meet with presidents, protest, and advocate for Indigenous rights. In this collection, learn more about the history of Native Americans at the White House, and their impact on the presidency.

Pictureworks Entertainment announces Tracey Deer (Mohawk) as the director of the upcoming feature film THORPE, join us in welcoming Tracey to tell Jim Thorpe's story.

DEADLINE HOLLYWOOD: Jim Thorpe Film On Fast Track; Tracey Deer Directs Script By 'Emancipation's William N. Collage & Help From Collective Of Native American Tribes

November 21, 2022 - Tracey Deer (Mohawk) said she was "honored and thrilled to bring Jim Thorpe's incredible story to the screen so audiences worldwide can experience the tremendous hurdles he overcame to become the greatest athlete of the 20th century. His resilience, passion and pride are shining examples of the greatness that Indigenous people are capable of but that the dominant society has tried so hard to quash over the years. The residential school system is just one of the injustices Jim and so many of our people have had to survive. Just as Jim has now been rightfully restored to his proper place as an Olympic champion, so too it is time for the world to face the realities of systemic racism and persecution that has permeated North American society so that we can begin to heal as a nation. My goal for Thorpe is to create a film that offers hope and inspiration, in spite of so much darkness, to show what is possible when you dare to dream. This is the gift of Jim's legacy to us all." ## How Pandemic Aid Is Boosting a Seattle-Area Tribe

Native American communities are receiving $20 billion in federal relief. The Suquamish Tribe is putting its share toward affordable housing.

“As bad as Covid has been, it’s given us an opportunity we didn’t have before,” said Crowell, who oversees the tribe’s housing programs. “Housing is survival,” he emphasized. “There are 1,200 of us on the planet. Affordable housing moves our people onto the reservation so we don’t lose them. It maintains our culture.”

For tribal members, living on the reservation “restores our tribal nation so people have that collective feeling of cultural practice,” said Forsman. “It builds relationships that were intentionally broken apart.”

ARP Funds Affordable Housing

In 2021, the US government allocated more than \$20 billion directly to some 574 tribal nations across the country as part as of the ARP — a package that represents “the largest infusion of federal funding for Indian Country in the history of the United States,” according to researchers at the Harvard Project on American Indian Economic Development. ARP funds offer a “once-in-a-lifetime” chance to transform Native communities, said Joe Kalt, director of the project. Hundreds of US tribes are at varying stages of planning or rolling out their projects, which range from building roads and broadband internet to expanding health care and job training.

“As the world careens toward greater climate instability, driven partly by the depletion of the world’s forests, there has never been a greater urgency to reform the building and construction sector. The built environment generates about 40% of planet-warming carbon emissions and the global building floor area is expected to double by 2060, according to Architecture 2030, a climate-centered nonprofit.

While about 27% of emissions from the built environment are operational — produced by processes such as cooling, heating or illumination — the rest are embodied in the structures through the extraction, manufacturing and transport of building materials.

Extending the life of existing structures, making them more efficient and reusing materials when properties are torn down offers one of the clearest paths for decarbonizing a sector that single-handedly threatens efforts to keep global warming within the 2C limit set in the 2015 Paris Agreement. “

Lizzy Toby Peters was a contemporary of the basket weaver Datsolalee. Peters is known for her mastery of traditional Washoe basketry techniques. To ensure consistency in color and texture, Washoe basket weavers harvested different plants at specific times of the year and processed them following distinct protocols. Using such grasses, the artist created boldly graphic containers with geometric designs that expressed both her personal identity and her tribal affiliation.

The N.Y. Times published a fascinating story over the weekend about a hunting map app called OnX that shows landlocked public lands across the West. Held by states or federal agencies, these areas are entirely surrounded by privately held properties, meaning they are essentially blocked to the public. The phenomenon is widespread across the American West, including in California, where an analysis found that roughly 830 square miles of state and federal lands are beyond reach to the public. [N.Y.
