when you learn about Indian Residential Schools, you're not learning about Indigenous Peoples, you are learning about the Church.

I left the Church Not because I long for sin Or long for lust Or long for selfishness I left because I long for truth I long for love ... I long for kindness Without the threat Of hell If I do not obey The way you want me to I left because God Creator/ Divine/ Spirit/ Must be bigger Than your book And your building I left for healing. I left for me. I left for those Who couldn't.

Japan's education system is so revolutionary that it is currently training children as "World Citizens", not Japanese.

A revolutionary pilot scheme called "Brave Change" (Futoji no henko), based on the Erasmus, Grundtvig, Monnet, Ashoka and Comenius educational programs is being tested in Japan. It's a change in concept. They will understand and accept different cultures and their horizons will be global, not national.

The 12-year-old program is based on concepts:

- Zero Fillers.
- Zero homework.
- And it only has 5 subjects, which are:
- 1. Corporate Arithmetic: Basic operations and use of financial calculators.

2. Reading: They start by reading a daily sheet of the book each child chooses and end up by reading a book a week.

3. Citizenship: I mean this, as total respect for laws, civil values, ethics, respect for the rules of coexistence, tolerance, altruism and respect for the ecology and the environment.

4. Computer Science: Office, Internet, social networks and online activities.

5. Tongues: 4 or 5 Alphabets, Cultures, Religions, including Japanese, Latin, English, German, Chinese, Arabic; with socialization exchange visits to families from each country during the summer.

What will be the result of this show?

Young people who at 18 speak 4 languages, know 4 cultures, 4 alphabets.

- They are experts in using their computers and cell phones as work tools.
- They read 52 books a year.
- Respect for the law, ecology and coexistence.
- They manage business and finance arithmetic perfectly.

Continuing the book journey with "Contemporary" authors

The turn of the 21st century marked the advent of a literary scene more explicitly focused on the realms of the intimate and the personal. Writers discussed life on and off 'the rez', and grappled with the intertwinement of Indigenous identity, class, gender and sexuality.

20. Natalie Diaz

In her poem 'The First Water Is the Body,' Natalie Diaz writes: Let me tell you a story about water: / Once upon a time there was us. / America's thirst tried to drink us away. / And here we still are.

Addressing the scorched terrain of American race relations, the writing of this decorated poet and MacArthur Foundation fellow disrupts the white gaze and put the Native experience front and center. As a Mojave enrolled in the Gila River Indian Tribe, Diaz pens incisive lines on Native culture and mythos with a strong personal voice, irrigating the land with her words.

Start with: When My Brother Was an Aztec

Diaz's 2012 award-winning debut collectiondeals with a host of issues, namely her brother's meth addiction, the complexities of family ties, and queer romance — all in the context of the Mojave life. In this memoir, the violence directed towards Native bodies is never far away — but nor is the ability to reclaim what the colonizers have taken.

21. Melissa Febos

Melissa Febos's Native American heritage remained a mystery until she got to visit her father's people, the Wampanoag tribe, as a teenager. Then, she started learning about a group of people that had — until that point — been far removed from her own understanding of family and identity. Combined with her love of literature and the creative arts, she has used this eye-opening journey to produce lyrical nonfiction books that reflect on the development of contemporary identities.

Start with: Whip Smart

Febos's first memoir, which brings to life her time as a student and a professional dominatrix struggling with substance abuse in New York City. If you like her engaging and pacy prose as much as we do, keep an eye out for her latest publication, Girlhood!

22. Cherie Dimaline

Cherie Dimaline made waves with the publication of her YA title, The Marrow Thieves, in 2017. The combining of Indigenous knowledge with science fiction to create an apocalyptic world not too different from our own proved to be a bestselling combination that allowed this debut to climb the ranks as one of the best YA books. In her novels, this writer and activist from the Georgian Bay Métiz Nation in Canada brings to light the dark history of forced removals of children from their families along with assimilation policies in Canada and the US. At the heart of it all, despite the hardship, storytelling, oral traditions, family, and hope are championed.

Start with: The Marrow Thieves

Set in a climate-dystopia where most of the population have lost their ability to dream, and Indigenous people are being hunted for their bone-marrow, the alleged cure for 'dreamlessness'. Fear of this precarious situation drives fifteen-year-old Frenchie and his companions into flight — but one of them may carry a secret that can help defeat the marrow thieves.

23. Brandon Hobson

Brandon Hobson is an enrolled citizen of the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma with a knack for eerie, contemporary fiction punctuated by acerbic social commentary. His novels are haunted by the ghosts of genocide and violence directed towards Native American peoples throughout history and today. In 2018, he was a finalist for the National Book Award with his novel Where the Dead Sit Talking and the winner of the Reading the West Award.

Start with: The Removed

Hobson's 2021 release explores historical and contemporary government-sanctioned violence against Cherokee teens. The trauma of the Trail of Tears is relived through the pages of this novel via the contemporary fatal police shooting of fifteen-year-old Ray-Ray Echota. Blending the realms of the real and the spiritual, this text is a potent meditation on generational grief and the power of storytelling.

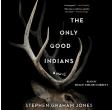

24. Rebecca Roanhorse

Roanhorse is of Ohkay Owingeh Pueblo and African American heritage — an identity she described as "pretty limiting... in 1970s Fort Worth." But it became a catalyst for a childhood spent using science fiction as a means of escapism. Years later, she became a science fiction writer herself — the popular novels Trail of Lightning and Black Sun are just two in a diverse collection of published work. She has even contributed to the Marvel universe, writing a one shot for the character of ECHO.

In an interview with the New York Times, Roanhorse said much of her early works were "Tolkien knockoffs about white farm boys going on journeys," before she started writing stories inspired by First Nation traditions and mythologies, centering queer characters and plotlines. Paving the way for a reimagination of indigenous narratives has characterised Roanhorse's career — her fiction flies in the face of the traditionally white, Eurocentric sci-fi genre and has redrawn the margins of epic fantasy as we know it.

Start with: Black Sun

Roanhorse's latest release and the first in the Between Earth and Sky trilogy. This epic fantasy is set in the magical city of Tova, during the onset of a solar eclipse which threatens to disrupt the harmony of an entire civilization. Let Roanhorse's suspenseful writing immerse you in a brand new world.

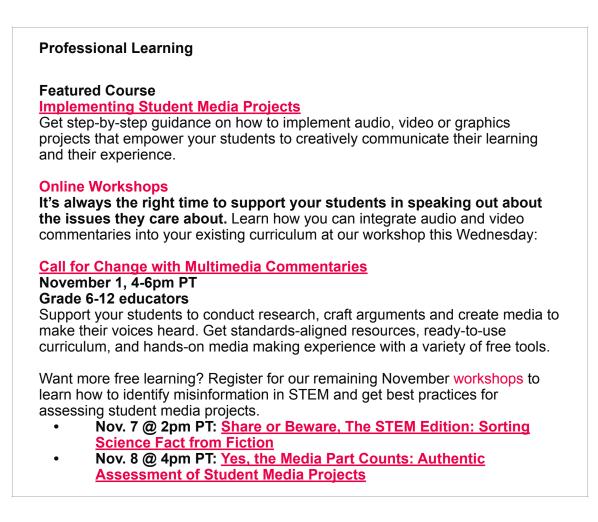

25. Stephen Graham Jones

With 15 novels and over 300 published short stories to his name, there's no shortage of material to choose from when it comes to reading Stephen Graham Jones. A master of the horror and science fiction genres, he has wooed readers the world over with his highly original, technically accomplished style. As a Blackfeet Native American, he is known to pay homage to writers of the Native American Renaissance like Gerald Vizenor, who heralded an era of increased Native American representation in writing.

Start with: The Only Good Indians

One of the two novels Jones published in 2020 (because someone's got to be productive), The Only Good Indians features four American Indian men who find themselves in a desperate struggle for survival, after a disturbing event from their past comes back to haunt them. In this suspenseful revenge-tale, the culture and traditions they had once abandoned catch up with the group in a series of violent and unanticipated ways.

Native Language Panel Series Location: Zoom – Register Here Date: Tuesday, November 7, 2023 Time: 3:00 – 4:30 pm ET

The Office of Indian Economic Development (OIED), Division of Economic Development invites you to the first of a three-part Native Language Panel Series at 3 PM EST on Tuesday, November 7, 2023, titled "Preserving Our Roots: The Urgency of Native Languages." This series is hosted in partnership with the U.S. Department of the Interior's Bureau of Indian Education (BIE).

This series aims to catalyze language revitalization and immersion efforts within Tribal communities. In Series Panel #1, Preserving Our Roots: The Urgency of Native Languages, the focus is on raising awareness and creating a sense of urgency regarding the state of Native languages. Panelists will discuss how they recognized the imperative for language revitalization and immersion, elaborating on their motivations for taking action. They will also share strategies and initiatives they have implemented to address this need.

Series Panel #2, Teaching our Heritage: Methods for Native Language Revitalization, will delve into effective language teaching strategies, providing a practical "how-to" guide for teaching Native languages.

Series Panel #3, Empowering Generations: Building Successful Language Programs, will concentrate on the development and management of successful language programs, offering insights into the journey by discussing successes, pitfalls, and obstacles encountered.

Dates and times for Series Panels #2 and #3 will be announced soon!

Our uncle Reverend Ernie Hooper passed on this evening. He always told us that that he was ready to go home and be with the Lord.

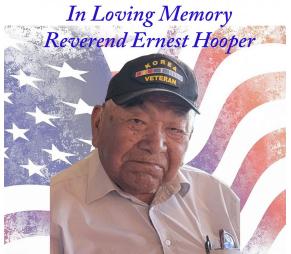

He is also now with Aunt Francis who passed couple years ago. When she passed he missed her so much. He and Aunt Francis were inseparable, and now they are together.

We thank you Uncle for everything you did for each and everyone of us and making sure we all knew the Lord.

Until we meet again.
