New State Health Improvement Plan places focus on healthcare access, mental health By Kevin Sheridan Published: Feb. 27, 2024 at 11:22 AM PST

RENO, Nev. (KOLO) - The new Nevada State Health Improvement Plan is highlighting access to healthcare, mental health and substance use, as well as other items as health needs.

The Nevada Division of Public and Behavioral Health published the report last week. The first of its kind report is produced by the DPBH and the University of Nevada, Reno.

“The State Health Improvement Plan provides a roadmap for state government and community partners to work together to improve the health of all in the Silver State,” DPBH Administrator Cody Phinney said. “I’m grateful to the members of the steering committee, subcommittees and subject matter experts who contributed time and expertise to develop timely, actionable goals and objectives to improve the health of Nevadans — and look forward to working collectively to address these critical health needs.”

It was developed with input from around 100 representatives of state and local government, tribal partners and organizations involved in public health. 15 goals were established under four strategic priorities: access to health care; mental health and substance use; social determinants of health; and public health infrastructure.

Three rare species found in Nevada may warrant endangered species protections

RENO, Nev. (KOLO) - Conservationists are keeping an eye on some rare species that may warrant special protections.

A flower, a toad, and a rabbit, all have one thing in common. They're facing potential protections under the Endangered Species Act. Patrick Donnelly, the Great Basin Director for the Center of Biological Diversity says that mining, residential development, and urban expansion are all variables in habitat loss - the driving factor in most species becoming endangered. Those species are the Railroad Valley toad — one of the smallest western toad species, the Carson City Monkey Flower, and the pygmy rabbit — a small rabbit found in the Great Basin.

“We would prefer that species not get so threatened they need this protection in the first place, but the reality is, we are in an extinction crisis,” Donnelly said.

The iconic Carson City Monkey Flower once carpeted the capital city. But, to date, has lost 40 % of its habitat and Donnelly says, it's happening in real time.

“As we were doing surveys for this endangered act petition we saw Carson City Monkey Flowers getting bulldozed for a housing development,” said Donnelly.

But even environments lost naturally are causing problems when it comes to protecting biodiversity. Sage brush destroyed by wildfires is causing a rapid decline in pygmy rabbits.

“We feel like the pygmy rabbit is spiraling towards extinction,” said Donnelly.

Extinction isn't always a numbers game. Donnelly says it's not always the lack in population that can get animals onto the Endangered Species List, but how wide spread they are. Or, in the case of the Railroad Valley toad, how narrowly distributed they are. Under their review, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service found there were credible threats to the rare toads' existence that warranted further analysis, including oil and gas extraction in Railroad Valley, and proposals for lithium extraction.

DINAP:

Grantee Spotlight:

Ysleta Del Sur Pueblo - Financial Literacy Savings Challenge

Native Pathways combined with the Department of Economic Development to strengthen workforce development efforts, build earning capacity and lower the Pueblo's 14% unemployment rate, which is three times higher than the national rate. Native Pathways serves low income, unemployed or underemployed Native Americans in 122 counties in the western half of Texas through the Workforce Innovation and Opportunity Act (WIOA). Since its inception in 1979, the Ysleta Del Sur Pueblo Native Pathways program has been at the forefront of creating job opportunities for Native Americans living throughout West Texas and on reservations within the region. The program is responsible for assisting Native American participants to prepare for and obtain high quality or career-based jobs. To meet its goals, Native Pathways has established long-term relationships and collaborations with various job training providers such as: vocational and educational institutions, employer partners, regional workforce development boards and various job development or ancillary agencies. The critical challenge for this program is helping the community attain technical/ vocational training and workforce skills, resulting in better employment opportunities and an increase in family income and financial security.

The Financial Literacy Savings Challenge has emerged as a transformative force, empowering work experience participants to achieve their financial goals. Equipped with vital financial knowledge and skills, participants are now completing their programs with greater success, evidenced by increased positive-term outcomes. This success is further amplified by the program's innovative savings challenge incentive match. Participants who meet the criteria receive a financial stipend matching their savings contributions, fostering financial responsibility and creating a sense of ownership and achievement. This powerful combination has paved the way for participants' long-term financial security and success. The program's impact resonates beyond mere numbers - to date, over $15,000 in savings matches have been awarded, empowering individuals financially and professionally. Employers have praised the program's effectiveness, the participants' eagerness to learn, and valuable workplace contributions. The Financial Literacy Savings Challenge is not simply imparting financial knowledge but building brighter futures, one participant at a time.
