Chaw'se Roundhouse In Amador County Damaged By Fire

Fire at Indian Grinding Rock State Historic Park

Pine Grove, CA — A fire early Sunday morning damaged the historic Chaw'se Roundhouse at the Indian Grinding Rock State Historic Park in Amador County.

Amador Fire Department reports that it happened at 12:04 am and the flames were quickly knocked down, limiting damage to 20% of the roof. No other areas of the park were impacted and no injuries were reported.

A cultural ceremony was taking place inside the roundhouse at the time of the incident and all participants safely evacuated before firefighters arrived. Firefighters remained on the scene for several hours mopping up the incident. Amador Fire adds that the Chaw'se holds cultural and historical significance for the Miwok tribe, serving as a sacred space for traditional ceremonies and community gatherings.

The state park is located at 14881 Pine Grove Volcano Rd.

Segregation returns. 'Segregated facilities' are no longer explicitly banned in federal contracts, the LAist reports. The segregation clause is one of several identified in a public memo issued by the General Services Administration last month, affecting all civil federal agencies

Food banks. The USDA has halted millions of dollars of deliveries to food banks, Politico reports. For the Central California Food Bank, that means a loss of 500,000 pounds of expected food deliveries worth $850,000 just for April through July, according to co-CEO Natalie Caples.

Rich debt, poor debt. As credit card rates soar above 21% for average consumers, wealthier customers enjoy lower "business" rates that average consumers subsidize, the Atlantic reports.

Boxes of mud could tell a hopeful sediment story

“This March, six boxes of mud shipped to a company in England for analysis. Scraped off the marsh surface, stripped from field magnets, and scooped off silicon disks, science teams collected these 430 samples in recent months from the tidal channels and marsh flats around Eden Landing in the South Bay. The samples may contain tiny specks of neo-green, magnetized silt called “tracers.” While invisible to the naked eye in a lump of bay muck, these fluorescent tracers promise to reveal their travels under the microscope. It’s all part of an elaborate experiment in which scientists are feeding sediment to needy marshes threatened by sea level rise. “I was really excited to see so many people invest so much time and energy in testing whether this new nature-based approach could work. It’s very forward-thinking,” says USGS research ecologist Karen Thorne. ... ” Read more from Knee Deep Times.

Pooha-Bah Traditional Native American Healing Center Yucca Mountain Spring Gathering

Saturday April 19, 2025

ALL ARE WELCOME!

Spring Gathering is a traditional Native American practice on the land of bringing the people together creating tribal community practicing song, dance, prayer and sharing food. Discussion of the land, plants and animals will also take place, as will a hike to Yucca Mountain, the proposed high-level nuclear waste repository. The Spring Gathering at Yucca Mountain also provides an opportunity for immersion into nuclear threats, hazards and risks.

Senate bill aims to formalize Tule River Tribe's water rights

“A bill that would finally formalize a 2007 agreement between the Tule River Indian Tribe and several downstream agricultural users advanced to the Senate earlier this month. The “Tule River Tribe Reserved Water Rights Settlement Act of 2025,” introduced by Senators Alex Padilla and Adam Schiff (both D-California), advanced from the Committee on Indian Affairs and will be heard on the Senate floor. If passed, the bill would accomplish several tasks, including securing an annual supply of 5,828 acre feet of surface water from the South Fork of the Tule River for the reservation’s domestic water system, which serves more than 400 homes and all of its administration buildings. “Meeting basic water needs is foundational to any society, and it is directly linked to our ability to exist as a sovereign nation,” said Lester Shine Nieto, Tribal Council chairman in his committee testimony Feb. 25. “In these last years, we have learned more than ever that water is sovereignty.” ...” Read more from SJV Water.

New York’s Metropolitan Museum of Art has returned an ancient bronze griffin head stolen nearly a century ago to a museum in southern Greece, the latest repatriation marking a broader shift in the museum world to return significant artifacts. The 7th century B.C. artifact was on display at the Archaeological Museum of Olympia, the city that in ancient times was the birthplace of the games that later inspired the modern Olympic Games. Greece’s culture minister, Lina Mendoni, attended a ceremony Friday at the museum, calling the return a significant moment.

Honoring trailblazing Ak-Chin leader 'Leona Legend'

The first female to serve as chairperson for the Ak-Chin community is also credited with working to increase their agricultural footprint and helping to negotiate a landmark water rights agreement

By: Nick Ciletti

A true trailblazer in every sense of the word — that's how those who knew and worked alongside Leona Carlyle-Kakar would describe her.

Not only was she the first female to serve as chairperson for the Ak-Chin Indian Community, she is also credited with working alongside her brothers to increase the community's agricultural footprint and heralded with helping to negotiate a landmark water rights agreement - the first of its kind for any Native American community in the nation.

ABC15 went to the Ak-Chin reservation to meet with leaders and learn more about this pioneer to celebrate Women's History Month.

Driving through fields on the Ak-Chin reservation near Maricopa, you'll see pecans, potatoes, and hope.

What you see is more than former Chairperson Leona Carlyle-Kakar, who grew up in the 1930s, could have ever dreamed of.

Carlyle-Kakar passed away in April 2024 at the age of 88.

"She took pride and joy on the farm," explains Carlyle-Kakar's daughter, Raychel Peters.

Peters says her mother's older brothers recruited her to help with developing farmland on the Ak-Chin reservation. Working as a grocery store clerk at the time, Peters says it was uncharted territory for her mother, but she never shied away from challenges.

And it paid off.

Today, there are roughly 16,000 acres of farmland on the reservation.

Working on the tribal council for more than four decades and working on the Farm Board for more than half a century, it made sense for Carlyle-Kakar to become chairperson for the Ak-Chin, the first time a woman had ever held that title.

Is planting trees ‘DEI’? Trump administration cuts nationwide tree-planting effort

“The Trump administration’s efforts to end federal diversity, equity and inclusion programs have hit an unexpected target: In February, communities around the country learned that funding was canceled for a nationwide tree-planting program aimed at making neighborhoods cooler, healthier and more resilient to climate change. The urban forestry initiative, administered by the nonprofit Arbor Day Foundation, was supposed to distribute $75 million in grant funding to about 100 cities, nonprofit organizations and tribes to plant shade trees in neighborhoods that need them the most. The program was funded by the 2022 Inflation Reduction Act, which included big investments in climate initiatives. In a letter terminating the contract, the U.S. Forest Service stated the program “no longer aligns with agency priorities regarding diversity, equity and inclusion.” The U.S. Department of Agriculture, which houses the Forest Service, said in an emailed statement that the agency was complying with President Trump’s executive orders. ...” Read more from the LAist.

Trump executive order streamlines mining permits. Environmentalists fear what comes next

“President Donald Trump signed an executive order behind closed doors on Thursday that aims to fast-track mining projects across the country and prioritize mineral production on public lands with suitable resources—a decision natural resource lawyers and environmentalists say has the potential to dismantle protected landscapes like national monuments as well as threaten endangered species, waterways and local communities. The executive order is the latest action from the Trump administration rolling back environmental regulations and public land protections. It uses emergency powers to streamline federal reviews of mineral extraction projects and set the stage for numerous proposed mines on public lands, many of which are opposed by local communities for threatening wildlife, degrading landscapes that are sacred to tribes and consuming vast amounts of water in arid regions. ...” Read more from Inside Climate News.

California’s giant, troubled lake is running out of time

View of the Salton Sea from the North Shore Beach and Yacht Club in Mecca, California.

“After decades of trial and error, a new plan is taking shape around the Salton Sea, California’s largest — and endlessly troubled — lake. The accidental inland sea, some 35 miles long, sprung to life 120 years ago when the Colorado River breached an irrigation canal east of Palm Springs. The sudden, shimmering water briefly created a tourist boom that lasted into the 1960s, though for much of the half-century, the lake could more aptly be described as an environmental disaster zone. Now a new wave of conservation efforts, sparked by millions of dollars in recent federal funding, has washed ashore at the ultra-briny sea, and there’s cautious hope from some that incoming industry will bring an economic boom. That is, if it doesn’t all fall apart first. ...” Read more from SF Gate.
